Nit'ri-an (nĭt'rĭ-ăn), a. Of or pert. to Nitria (Nitrias), a desert region west of Cairo, Egypt, which was in early times the seat of a famous settlement of anchorets; as, the Nitrian (Curetonian) manuscript of the four Gospels.

ni'tri-fac'tion (nī'trĭ-făk'shŭn), n. [nitro- + -faction.] Chem. Formation of niter.

ni-trim'ide (nī-trĭm'ĭd; -īd; 184), n. Also -id. [nitro- + imide.] Chem. See SILICAM.

ni'tro (nī'trō), n. Short for NITRO POWDER. [2.]

ni'tro-a-liz'a-rin, n. See NITRO-; ALIZARIN (nĭ'trō-ăl'ä-rĭn; -ăl'ĭ-rĭn; 184), n. Also -in. Nitramine. [= NITRANILINE.]

ni'tro-an'i-line, n. Also -lin. NITRANILINE.

Ni'tro-bac'ter (nī'trō-băk'tẽr), n. [NL.] Bacteriol. A genus established to include the nitric bacteria, now commonly classed under Bacillus.

ni'tro-ba'rite (-bā'rīt; -bâr'ĭt), n. Min. Native barium nitrate, $Ba(NO_3)_2$.

ni'tro-ben-zo'ic, a. Chem. Designating any of three crystalline acids, $C_6H_7(NO_2)CO_2H$, got by nitrating benzoic acid and in other ways.

ni'tro-ben'zol (-bĕn'zōl; -zōl), ni'tro-ben'zole (-zōl), n. Nitrobenzene.

ni'tro-cal'cite, n. [nitro- + calcite.] Min. Native calcium nitrate, $Ca(NO_3)_2 \cdot 4aq.$, occurring as an efflorescence on old walls, in limestone caves, etc.

ni'tro-car'bol (-kär'bŏl; -bōl), n. [nitro- + carbon + 2*d -ol.*] Nitromethane.

ni'tro-cel'lu-lose, n. See CELLULOSE NITRATE.

ni'tro-cu'mene, n. See NITRO-, 2.

ni'trog'e-nous (nī'trŏj'ĕ-nŭs), a. = NITROGENOUS.

ni'tro-gen'ic (-jĕn'ĭk), a. Nitrogenous. [oxide.]

nitrogen pentoxide. Nitric anhydride [ANHYDRIDE.]

ni'tro-glu'cose, n. An explosive substance got by nitrating glucose.

ni'trole, ni'trol (nī'trōl), n. [nitro- + 1st -ol.] A nitrolic acid.

ni'tro-lin (nī'trō-lĭn), ni'tro-line (-lĭn; -lēn), n. An explosive made by treating sugar with nitric acid and mixing the product with saltpeter and cellulose.

ni'tro-mag'ne-site, n. [nitro- + magnesite.] Min. Native magnesium nitrate, $Mg(NO_3)_2 + aq.$, occurring as an efflorescence in limestone caverns.

ni'tro-mane, n. [nitro- + -mane, of uncert. origin.] Bacteriol. Any soil microörganism effecting nitrification; one of the nitrobacteria.

ni'tro-meth'ane, n. Chem. A mobile liquid, CH_3NO_2, got by treating methyl iodide with silver nitrite, and otherwise.

ni'tro-prus'sic (nī'trō-prŭs'ĭk; cf. PRUSSIC), a. [nitro- + prussic.] Chem. Designating, or pert. to, a red, crystalline, unstable acid, $H_2Fe(NO)(CN)_5$, obtained in the form of its salts, the nitroprussides, by action of nitric acid on ferrocyanides, by action of sodium nitrite and acetic acid on ferricyanides, etc. The nitroprussides are usually acid on ferricyanides, etc. The nitroprussides are usually colored and crystalline. In solution they give a rich purple color with alkali sulphides.

ni'tro-sal'i-cyl'ic (-săl'ĭ-sĭl'ĭk), a. [nitro- + salicylic.] Org. Chem. Pert. to or designating any nitro derivative of salicylic acid, esp. that one formed by action of nitric acid on salicylic acid, indigo (or anil), etc., and called also anilic acid and indigotic acid. It is a white crystalline substance, $C_6H_3(NO_2)(OH)CO_2H$, melting at 228° C.

ni'tros-am'ine (nī'trōs-ăm'ĭn ; -ā-mēn' ; 184), n. Also -in. Org. Chem. Any of a class of neutral compounds derived from amines (esp. secondary amines) by replacement of hydrogen by the nitroso group, and hence characterized by the grouping :N·NO. They are in general oily liquids.

ni'tro-sate (nī'trō-sāt), n. [G. nitrosat, contr. fr. nitrosonitrat.] Org. Chem. Any of a class of compounds obtained by the action of nitrogen peroxide on unsaturated hydrocarbons, and characterized by the grouping $O_2NOC{\cdot}C{\cdot}NOH$.

ni'tro-site (-sīt), n. [G. nitrosit, fr. nitrosonitrit.] Chem. Any of a class of compounds obtained by action of nitrous acid or anhydride on unsaturated hydrocarbons and characterized by the grouping ONOC·C:NOH (or ONC·CONO).

ni-tro'so- (nī-trō'sō-). [See NITROUS.] Chem. A combining form (also used adjectively) designating the group or radical :NO, called the nitroso group or nitrosyl, or its compounds ; as, *nitroso*benzene, C_6H_5NO (benzene in which a hydrogen atom has been replaced by the nitroso group). Certain compounds isomeric with nitroso compounds, and containing the grouping C:NOH instead of CH·NO, are called isonitroso compounds. — nitroso blue. See DYE.

ni-tro'so-chlo'ride (-klō'rīd ; -rĭd ; 184, 201), n. Also -rid. Chem. Any of a class of compounds formed by action of nitrosyl chloride (NOCl) on unsaturated hydrocarbons, and characterized by the grouping ClC·C:NOH.

ni'tro-sul'phate (nī'trō-sŭl'fāt), n. Chem. A supposed salt of nitric and sulphuric acids ; as, nitrosulphate (called also nitrosulphide) of iron, a liquor made by treating ferrous sulphate (copperas) with nitric acid and used in dyeing as a mordant. It contains ferric nitrate and ferric sulphate.

ni'tro-syl (nī'trō-sĭl), n. [nitroso- + -yl.] Chem. The univalent radical NO, called also the nitroso group.

nitrosyl chloride. Chem. An orange-yellow gas, NOCl, formed by heating aqua regia and by other methods.

ni'tro-syl'ic (nī'trō-sĭl'ĭk), a. Chem. Of or pertaining to nitrosyl ; as, nitrosylic acid (hyponitrous acid).

nitrosyl sulphuric acid. A colorless or white crystalline acid, $H(NO)SO_4$, formed by reaction of sulphuric acid with oxides of nitrogen (not N_2O), by reaction of sulphur dioxide with nitric oxide or nitrogen peroxide, etc. It is formed by the latter reaction in the sulphuric acid factories, sometimes separating in chamber crystals. It is decomposed by water, regenerating sulphuric acid. Called also nitrososulphuric, nitrosulphonic, and nitrosulphuric, acid.

ni'tro-tol'u-ene (-tŏl'ū-ēn), n. Also ni'tro-tol'u-ol (-ōl ; -ōl). Chem. Any nitro derivative of toluene, esp. any of the three isomeric mono derivatives, $C_6H_4(NO_2)CH_3$, of which the ortho and para varieties are obtained by direct nitration of toluene, and are used in preparing toluidines.

ni'trous (nī'trŭs), a. [L. nitrosus full of natron : cf. F. nitreux. See NITER.] 1. Of, pertaining to, containing, or impregnated with, niter ; of the nature of niter, or resembling it ; as, nitrous powder ; Obs., nitrous air (Priestley's name for nitric oxide).

2. Chem. Pert. to or designating any compound in which nitrogen is relatively lower in valence than in nitric compounds.

nitrous acid, Chem., an acid, HNO_2, forming a series of well-characterized salts, the nitrites, but itself known only in solution, since it readily decomposes into nitric acid, nitric oxide, and water. — n. anhydride, a compound, N_2O_3, obtained as a deep blue, unstable liquid boiling at 3.5° C. (38.3° F.) and decomposing into nitric oxide and nitrogen peroxide. — n. bacteria, any of various soil bacteria, of the genera Pseudomonas and Micrococcus, which convert ammonia compounds to nitrites. Pseudomonas europæa is the best-known species. — nitrous ether, Chem., ethyl nitrite. — n. oxide. See LAUGHING GAS. — n. vitriol, Sulphuric Acid Manuf., concentrated sulphuric acid in which nitrous gases have been absorbed in the Gay-Lussac tower. See GLOVER TOWER.

niv'e-ous (nĭv'ē-ŭs), a. [L. niveus, fr. niv, nivis, snow.] Snowy ; resembling snow ; pure shining white.

nix (nĭks), n. ; fem. NIXE (nĭk'sĕ) ; G. pl. NIXE (nĭk'sĕ) or NIXEN (-sĕn) ; E. pl. NIXES (nĭk'sĕz ; -sĭz). [G. Cf. NICKER.] Teut. Myth. A water sprite, usually small of stature, in the form sometimes of a woman, sometimes of a man, or part man, part fish. The nix loves music, is given to soothsaying, and is fond of mingling in the dances of mortals ; but it is likely to be treacherous. Cf. UNDINE, 1, LORELEI.

Ni-zam' (nē-zäm'), n. [Hind. & Per. nizām order, a ruler, fr. nizam order, arrangement, fr. Ar. naẓama to arrange, govern.] 1. The title of the native sovereigns of Haidarabad, Dekkan, in India, since 1713.

2. [l. c.] [Turk. nizām.] pl. NIZAM. A regular soldier of the Turkish army. See ARMY ORGANIZATION.

Njorth (nyôrth) } n. Also Njord [Icel. Njörðr.] Teut.
Njör'thr (nyûr'thr') } Myth. One of the Vanir, deities associated with the goddess Nerthus. He was the hostage given by the Vanir to the Æsir after their contest, and was protector of seafarers, having rule over the winds. See VANIR.

no (nō), adv. [ME. no, na, AS. nā ; ne not + ā ever. AS. ne is akin to OHG. ni, Goth. ni, Russ. ne, Ir., Gael., & W. ní, L. ne- (in comp.), nē, Gr. νη (in comp.), Skr. nā, and also to E. prefix un- not. Cf. NAY, NOT, NICE, NEFARIOUS ; AYE.] 1. Not ; — formerly used generally, but now only Scot, or in expressions of alternative or opposing courses of action, judgments, opinions, or the like. Also formerly used in negative interrogation.

> A man may fight and no be slain. Burns.
> I am perplex'd and doubtful whether or no
> I dare accept this your congratulation. Coleridge.

2. Not any ; not at all ; not in any respect or degree ; — used with comparative adjectives and with other ; as, he is no worse than he was yesterday.

> We do no otherwise than we are willed. Shak.

3. Not so ; — used to express negation, dissent, denial, or refusal in answer to a question, etc., or to introduce a statement correcting or contradicting that of another person or of one's self ; the opposite of yes (cf. NAY, adv., 1) ; as, are you going ? No, I am not going. It is often doubled for emphasis ; as, No, no, I will not. Before another negative, no is emphatic or introduces a more emphatic, explicit, or comprehensive statement (cf. NAY, adv., 2).

> No ! Nay, Heaven forbid. Coleridge.
> There is none righteous, no, not one. Rom. iii. 10.
> I . . . have found no fault in this man touching those things whereof ye accuse him : No, nor yet Herod. Luke xxiii. 14, 15.

no less, not less ; no fewer, smaller, or the like ; — often followed by than. — no more. a Not anything more or further ; nothing in addition ; not any longer ; never again ; nevermore ; as, he wanted no more ; there is no more bread ; he heard no more the roar of the storm. b No longer existent ; dead ; gone ; as, Cassius is no more ; Troy is no more. c To or in no greater degree ; no sooner ; — with than ; as, he can no more do it than he can fly.

no (nō), n. ; pl. NOES or NO's (nōz). 1. Act of uttering no ; a refusal by use of the word no ; a denial.

2. A negative vote or decision ; pl., those who vote in the negative ; nays ; as, the noes have it.

without no, beyond denial ; surely. Obs.

no, a. [ME. no, non, na, nan, the same word as E. none ; cf. E. a, an. See NONE.] Not any ; not a ; — used in a variety of connections and constructions ; as : a With other negatives or redundantly. Obs. or Dial. or Illiterate.

> Ther nas [was not] no man no wher so vertuous. Chaucer.

b Without other negatives.

> Let there be no strife . . . between me and thee. Gen. xiii. 8.

c With another adjective, qualifying both it and the noun, the two adjectives taken together usually implying a meaning more commonly expressed by the opposite positive statement ; as, he made no short speech ; I have no great regard for him. "No small tempest lay on us." Acts xxvii. 20. d With a noun in the predicate ; as, it is no (i. e., an extremely short) distance there.

> That goodness is no name, and happiness no dream. Byron.

e With a verbal noun or gerund in the predicate, indicating the impossibility of the specified action ; as, there is no denying his tale ; there is no delaying his going.

☞ No is used in combination with nouns or adjectives with various forces ; as : a Denoting that a thing or person is not properly entitled to the name. Now Rare.

> Under this no-government the Schoolhouse began to see bad times. T. Hughes.

b Denoting complete absence of what is named ; as, a vote of no confidence, or, attrib., a no-confidence vote.

> To extract any such meaning, or rather no-meaning, . . . is to play tricks with words. J. Martineau.

c Denoting objection or opposition ; — in attrib. phrases ; as, a no-compromise position. d With adjectives, equivalent to non-, un-, or in-. Obs.

☞ In Middle English before a vowel non or noon was used. "No man." "Noon apotecarie." Chaucer.

no go, a hopeless attempt ; a failure ; fiasco. Colloq. Thackeray. — no man, nobody ; no one.

> Hath no man condemned thee ? John viii. 10, 11.

— no man's land. a Land to which no one has the exclusive right of possession ; land belonging to no one ; specif., in Great Britain, a piece of land (called also Jack's land ; cf. CLOOTIE'S CROFT) not subject to any definite rights of ownership or not lying in any particular known parish, as formerly in England and Scotland. b Naut. A space amidships not regarded as belonging distinctly to either the port or starboard watch ; hence, a space or, by extension, a job, on a ship belonging to no one in particular to care for. Rare. — no one, no person ; nobody ; none. — No-Popery Riots. See GORDON RIOTS.

No-a'chi-an (nō-ā'kĭ-ăn), a. Of or pertaining to the patriarch Noah or his time ; fig., extremely ancient or antique.

No'a-chite (nō'ā-kīt), n. Freemasonry. One who has taken the 21st degree of the Scottish rite, called by its possessors not a degree, but the "Very Ancient Order of Noachites," i. e., descendants of Noah. Called also Prussian Knight, the order having been established in Prussia in 1755. Some extend the term Noachites to all Freemasons.

No'ah (nō'ä), n. [Heb. Nōaḥ.] 1. Lit., rest ; comfort ; — masc. prop. name.

2. Bib. A patriarch who at God's command built an ark to save his family and a number of individuals of all living creatures in the time of the Deluge, or Flood. Gen. v. 28–x.

No'ah's ark' (nō'äz). a A child's toy, consisting of an ark-shaped box containing many different wooden animals. b A marine bivalve filibranchiate shell (Arca noæ), suggestive of an ark, or ship, in form. c Meteor. An extended formation of cirro-stratus clouds in parallel bands, which in perspective appear to converge at both ends ; polar bands. It is called also salmon cloud, and, when it is supposed to be accompanied by magnetic disturbances, magnetic cirrus. d [caps.] Astron. = ARGO, 2.

nob (nŏb), n. [Cf. KNOB.] Slang or Cant. 1. The head.

2. A blow on the head.

3. Cribbage. A knave, or jack, of the same suit as the card turned up, held in a hand. It counts one to the holder. Usually in the phrase one for his nob (or nobs).

no'—ball', n. Cricket. A ball unfairly bowled. A no-ball counts one run to the batting side.

nob'ble (nŏb'l), v. t. ; NOB'BLED (-ld) ; NOB'BLING (-blĭng). a To incapacitate (a horse), as by drugging. Racing Cant, Eng. b Slang, Eng. a To win over to one's side or interest, as by bribery. b To obtain dishonestly ; to steal. c To overreach ; circumvent ; cheat ; swindle ; "do." d To catch ; seize ; "nab."

No-bel' prizes (nō-bĕl'). Prizes for the encouragement of men and women who work for the interests of humanity, established by the will of A. B. Nobel (1833-96), the Swedish inventor of dynamite, who left his entire estate for this purpose. These are awarded yearly for what is regarded as the most important work during the year in physics, chemistry, medicine or physiology, idealistic literature, and service in the interest of peace. The prizes, averaging $40,000 each, were first awarded in 1901.

ni'tro-naph'tha-lene, n. Org. Chem. Any nitro derivative of naphthalene, esp. either of the two mono derivatives. Those containing several nitro groups are explosive.

ni'tro-par'af-fin, n. Org. Chem A nitro derivative of any member of the paraffin series.

ni'tro-phe'nol, n. Chem. Any nitro derivative of phenol, esp. any of the three mono derivatives, o-, m-, and p-nitrophenol.

ni-troph'i-lous (nī-trŏf'ĭ-lŭs), a. [nitro- + -philous.] Bot. Thriving in nitrogenous soils.

ni'tro-prus'si-ate (nī'trō-prŭs'ĭ-āt), n. A nitroprusside. See NITROPRUSSIC.

ni'tro-quin'ol (-kwĭn'ōl ; -ōl), n. Org. Chem. See NITRO-, 2.

nit'ta tree (nĭt'ä). [From a native African name.] Either of two leguminous trees of the Old World tropics (Parkia africana and P. biglandulosa) the pods of which contain edible pulp and seeds.

nitte. † NIT, NITE, NUTTE.

nit'ter (nĭt'ẽr), n. [From NIT.] An insect, as a botfly, that deposits nits on horses.

nit'ty (nĭt'ĭ), a. 1. Full of, or infested with, nits.

2. Having small spots, as cotton goods, etc.

ni'u (nē'ōō), n. [Siamese.] See MEASURE.

ni'tuke (nĭ'tūk). [NOOK. | niuk (nuk). Dial. Eng. var. of] NUKE.

ni'val (nī'văl), a. [L. nivalis, fr. nix, nivis, snow.] Abounding with, or living in, snow. Also ni'nive. Obs. or Scot. var. of NIEVE.

ni'vel, v. i. [Cf. OF. niveler to snift, or E. snivel.] To snivel. Obs.

niv'el-la'tion (nĭv'ĕl-lā'shŭn), n. [F. niveler to level ; fr. OF. nivel, livel, n., level. Cf. LEVEL.] Leveling.

niv'el-li-za'tion (-lĭ-zā'shŭn ; -lī-zā'-), n. Phon. Leveling. See LEVEL, v. t., 7.

niv'en-ite (nĭv'ĕn-īt), n. [From personal name Niven.] Min. A velvet-black variety of uraninite, occurring massive. H., 5.5. Sp. gr., 8.01.

ni'ver'naise' (nē'vẽr'nāz'), n. [F.] A ragoutlike dish of carrots stewed in consommé, used as a garnish.

nix (nĭks), n. [Cf. G. nichts nothing.] 1 Nothing ; no one. Slang.

2. U. S. Mail Service. A piece of mail matter which cannot be delivered, because improperly addressed ; — usually in the pl. Cant. [Slang.]

nix'ie (nĭk'sĭ), n. A female water sprite. See 1st NIX.

Nix'on (nĭk'sŭn), n. A red-faced person ; — from Sam Weller's comparison of his father to "the Cheshire prophet" Robert Nixon (fl. 1620?). "You've been a prophesyin' very fine, like a red-faced Nixon." Dickens.

nixt. † NEXT.

nix-u-ri'ate, v. [L. nixurire to wish to bring forth.] To endeavor or attempt. Obs.

ni-yo'ga (nē-yō'gä), n. [Skr. niyōga order, necessity, fate.] A Hindu custom in accordance with which a man who has no son may have a person appointed to beget by his wife an heir to perpetuate his name and family cult.

niz. Var. of NESE, nose.

ni-zam'ate (nē-zäm'āt), n. The territory of the Nizam.

ni-za'mut, -mat (-zä'mŭt), n. [Hind. & Ar. niẓāmat.] Office or sovereignty of the Nizam.

Ni-za'mut a-daw'lut, or Ni-za'mat a-da'lat. [Hind. niẓāmat 'adālat. Cf. NIZAM.] See ADAWLUT.

niz'y (nĭz'ĭ), n. ; pl. NIZIES (-ĭz). Also niz'ey ; pl. NIZEYS (-ĭz). [Cf. NICE, a.] A fool ; a noodle. Obs. or Archaic.

node (nōd), n. [L. nodus. Cf. NEWEL, NOWED.] 1. A knot, complication, or difficulty, as in a drama.
2. A knot, knob, protuberance, or swelling.
3. Bot. The joint of a stem; the point of insertion of a leaf or leaves.
4. Med. A protuberance or knotty swelling, as on bones attacked by syphilis, or in the neighborhood of a joint affected by rheumatism or gout.
5. Astron. Either of the two points where the orbit of a planet, or comet, intersects the ecliptic, or where the orbit of a satellite intersects the plane of the orbit of its primary. The node passed as the body goes north is called the ascending node (☊), that passed in going south, the descending node (☋). See DRAGON'S HEAD.
6. Dialing. A hole, or point, in the gnomon of a dial, the light or shadow from which marks the hour, the parallels of the sun's declination, the sun's place in the ecliptic, etc.

Node, 7. The vibrating string ab, when stopped at ½ its length, forms Nodes or Nodal Points n, n', n'', respectively at ½, ½, and ¾ ab; l, l', l'', etc., are the Loops or Ventral Segments.

7. Physics. A point, line, or plane of a vibrating body marked by absolute or relative freedom from vibratory motion; — contrasted with antinode, loop, ventral segment. A stretched string, vibrating as a whole, has nodes only at the ends, and gives its fundamental tone; if, however, the middle point be restrained, as by touching with the finger, it becomes a node, and the string vibrates in two segments, producing the octave. If a point at one third of its length be touched, the interference of waves produces another node at the two-thirds point, and the string then vibrates in three segments, giving the fifth above the octave. These segmentary vibrations may occur simultaneously with the simpler vibration (see HARMONIC). Vibrating columns of air, as in organ pipes, have similar nodes, which are places of maximum condensation and rarefaction (see PIPE). The nodes of a vibrating plate are illustrated by sonorous figures (which see). Node is used not only in acoustics, but also in light, electricity, etc.
8. Geom. a A double point, which in regard to intersections counts as more than one point, at which, therefore, there is more than one tangent line or tangent plane, real or imaginary; the coincidence of two nonconsecutive points of a curve regarded as a system of points; a conjugate point; a conical point (on a surface) at which the surface is shaped like a double cone. See CRUNODE, ACNODE, CUSP. b A point of a surface considered as a node of the intersection of the surface with the plane tangent at the point (Cayley).

a Node, 8 a.

9. Anat. & Zoöl. A swelling; some part likened to a knot (cf. LYMPH NODE); specif.: a One of the small abdominal segments of an ant immediately behind the thorax. b A somewhat swollen spot near the middle of the front margin of a dragon fly's wing.
10. Mech. The point at which the lines of a funicular machine meet from different angular directions.

nodes of Ran'vier' (rän'vyā') [after Louis Ranvier (b. 1835), French histologist], Anat., in medullated nerve fibers, points where the medullary sheath is interrupted and the neurilemma and axis cylinder are in contact. See NERVE.

nod'i-cal (nŏd'ĭ-kăl; nō'dĭ-), a. Astron. Of or pert. to the nodes; measured from node to node; as, the nodical revolution of the moon. — nodical month. See MONTH, 1 b.

No'do-sa'ri-a (nō'dō-sā'rĭ-ȧ; 115), n. [NL., fr. L. nodosus knotty.] Zoöl. A genus of Foraminifera having the shell composed of numerous chambers arranged in a straight or gently curved line. — no'do-sa'ri-an (-ăn), no-dos'a-rine (nō-dŏs'ȧ-rĭn; nō'dō-sā'rĭn; -rīn), a. & n. — no'do-sa'ri-form (nō'dō-sā'rĭ-fôrm), a.

4. A warning against touching or interference.
5. A painting representing Christ's appearance to Mary Magdalene after the Resurrection; — so called from the Latin form of his warning to her. John xx. 17. no-li'tion (nō-lĭsh'ŭn), n. [L. nolle not to will, to be unwilling; ne + velle to will, to be willing.] Adverse action of will; unwillingness; — opposed to volition. Rare.
A nolition and a direct enmity against the lust. Jer. Taylor ‖ nol'le pros'e-qui (nŏl'ē prŏs'ē-kwī). [L., to be unwilling to prosecute.] Law. An entry on the record denoting that the prosecutor or plaintiff will proceed no further in his action or suit, either as a whole, or as to some count, or as to one or more of several defendants. In a criminal suit a nolle prosequi can be entered without the defendant's consent until the jury is impaneled, but not afterward.
‖ no'lo con-ten'de-re (nō'lō kŏn-tĕn'dē-rē). [L., I do not wish to contend.] Law. A plea by the defendant in a criminal prosecution, which, without admitting guilt, subjects him to a judgment of conviction as in case of a plea of guilty, but does not preclude him from denying the truth of the charges in a collateral proceeding. The form when used in the third person singular is non vult contendere. nol'-pros' (nŏl'prŏs'), v. t.; -PROSSED' (-prŏst'); -PROSS'ING. To discontinue by entering a nolle prosequi; to decline to prosecute.
‖ nom (nŏn), n. [F. See NOUN.] Name. — nom de guerre (dē gĕr'), lit., war name; hence, a fictitious name; pseudonym. — n. de plume (plūm') [an Eng. formation], lit., pen name; hence, a name assumed by an author as a signature; pseudonym.
no'ma (nō'mȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. νομή, lit., a feeding.] Med. Gangrenous stomatitis occurring oftenest in debilitated children, esp. after exhausting diseases, and marked by a sloughing ulcer affecting the mouth and cheek.
nom'ad (nŏm'ăd; nō'măd; 277: the leading dictionaries prefer the first pron., but the second apparently prevails, at least in present American use), n. [L. nomas, -adis, Gr. νομάς, -άδος, pasturing, roaming without fixed home, fr. νομός a pasture, allotted abode, fr. νέμειν to distribute, allot, drive to pasture; prob. akin to AS. niman to take, and E. nimble: cf. F. nomade. Cf. ASTRONOMY, ECONOMY, NIMBLE, NEMESIS, NUMB, NUMBER.] One of a race or tribe that has no fixed location, but wanders from place to place in search of pasture or game.
nom'ad, a. Roving; nomadic. no-mad'ic (nō-măd'ĭk), a. [Gr. νομαδικός. See NOMAD.] Of or pert. to, or characteristic of, nomads or their way of life; wandering; moving from place to place for subsistence; as, a nomadic tribe. — no-mad'i-cal-ly (-ĭ-kăl-ĭ), adv.

nom'arch-y (-är-kĭ), n.; pl. -ARCHIES (-kĭz). A province of the modern kingdom of Greece; a nome.
nome (nōm), n. [Gr. νόμος, fr. νέμειν to divide.] In ancient Greek music, a solo hymn in honor of a god, divided into parts according to a traditional scheme.
nome (nōm), n. In Greek form no'mos (nō'mŏs). [Gr. νομός, fr. νέμειν to deal out, distribute.] A province of modern Greece or of ancient Egypt; a nomarchy.
Each nomos [of ancient Egypt] had its own god (and totem?) and its own capital, and kept its distinct frontiers, its coat of arms, etc., down to very recent times.
no'men-cla'tor (nō'mĕn-klā'tẽr), n. [L.; nomen name + calare to call. See NAME; CALENDAR.] 1. A book containing collections or lists of words, a vocabulary. Obs.
2. A compiler of vocabularies or dictionaries. Obs. & R.
3. One who calls persons or things by their names; specif.: a In ancient Rome: (1) A slave who attended a candidate for office to tell him the names of influential persons whom they met. (2) A slave who told his master the names of the other slaves. b Antiq. An officer, as at the Roman imperial court of Constantinople, charged with inviting guests to banquets. c In modern use, one who tells or announces the names of guests or of persons generally. d A recounter or reckoner up. Obs. & R.
4. One who gives names to, or invents names for, things, or who settles and adjusts the nomenclature of any art or science; a classifier of objects under appropriate names.
no'men-cla'tur-al (nō'mĕn-klā'tūr-ăl), a. Pertaining to, or connected with, nomenclature; nomenclatorial. no'men-cla'ture (nō'mĕn-klā'tūr; 277), n. [L. nomenclatura: cf. F. nomenclature. See NOMENCLATOR.] 1. A name; designation. Rare. Bacon.
2. a A list, catalogue, or register, as of names or particulars. Rare. b A vocabulary, dictionary, or glossary. Obs.
3. The system of names used in a particular branch of knowledge or art, or by any school or individual; esp., the names used in classifications as distinguished from other technical terms (see TERMINOLOGY). Thus, in Bot. & Zool., nomenclature designates the Latin names of species, genera, and other groups, adopted that the same name may be intelligible to scientists of all nationalities; terminology designates names of organs, functions, processes, and all other technical terms of these sciences. The binomial system of nomenclature is now almost universally adopted; the first works in which it was systematically employed were Linnæus's "Species Plantarum" (1753) for botany, and the tenth edition of his "Systema Naturæ" (1758) for zoölogy. In zoölogical nomenclature the first word (generic name) is that of the genus to which the species belongs, and is always treated as a Latin noun; the second (specific name) is that peculiar to the species. Subspecies and other categories lower than species are often indicated by a third name (as Branta canadensis hutchinsii). When (as is often the case) more than one name has been applied to the same genus, or used as the specific name of the same species, the earliest published of the names in dispute are adopted, and all later ones regarded as synonyms, not to be used (if generic names) for any other genus in the same kingdom (animal or vegetable), or (if specific names) for any other species of the same genus. There is much less uniformity of usage in regard to names of groups of higher categories than the genus, and the law of priority is less strictly adhered to, but in recent classifications names of families and subfamilies (and, in Bot., also orders) are formed according to definite rules (see FAMILY, 7, SUBFAMILY). no'mi-al (nō'mĭ-ăl), n. [Cf. BINOMIAL.] Alg. A single name or term.
nom'ic (nŏm'ĭk), a. [Gr. νομικός, fr. νόμος a law, custom.] Characterized by a constancy or a customary procedure having the general force of a natural law; in accord with the routine or normal tenor of experience; hence, customary, ordinary, or conventional; — often applied to the usual English, as distinguished from phonetic, spelling. — n. Nomic spelling.
I shall, for convenience, . . . speak of natural law in the old sense, or, as a mere routine of perceptions, as law in the nomic sense. Law in the nomic sense is thus no product of the reason, but a pure order of perceptions. Karl Pearson.
nom'ic (nŏm'ĭk), a. Music. Of or pertaining to a nome. nom'ic (nŏm'ĭk), a. Of or pertaining to a nome, or province.
nom'i-nal (nŏm'ĭ-năl), a. [L. nominalis, fr. nomen, nominis, name. See NAME.] 1. Gram. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of, a noun or nouns; nounal; substantival.
2. Of or pertaining to the nominalists. Rare.
3. Of, pertaining to, of the nature of, or consisting in, a name or names.
4. Existing in name only; not real or actual; merely named, stated, or given, without reference to actual conditions; — often with the implication that the thing named is so small, slight, or the like, in comparison to what might properly be expected, as scarcely to be entitled to the name; as, a nominal difference; a nominal price. "Nominal attendance on lectures." Macaulay.
5. Consisting of, containing, or giving, names, as of a ship's company or of the soldiers of a regiment; mentioning by name; bearing the name of a person, as shares.
nominal damages, Law, the damages given for a violation of a right where no actual loss has accrued. — n. definition, Logic, an expression of the essential meaning of a term without necessarily giving the whole idea which it is intended to convey. — n. horse power. See HORSE POWER, 2 a. — n. par. See PAR, n., 2. — n. partner. See PARTNER. — n. price. See PRICE. — n. ratio of expansion. See RATIO OF EXPANSION.
nom'i-nal-ism (nŏm'ĭ-năl-ĭz'm), n. Metaph. The doctrine of the nominalists. It arose in Scholastic philosophy, and became a center of dispute first in the time of Roscellinus (11th century A.D.), who held that universal terms such as indicate genus or species, and all general collective words or terms such as animal, man, horse, tree, air, cloud, rock, ship, city, nation, wagon, etc., have no objective, real existences corresponding to them, but are mere words, names, or terms, mere vocal utterances, "flatus vocis;" only particular individual things and events exist. The historical occasion of this doctrine is found in Porphyry's Introduction to Aristotle's Categories, translated into Latin by Boëthius in the 6th century: "Mox de generibus et speciebus . . . sive in solis nudis intellectibus posita sint, sive substantia corporalia sint . . . utrum separata a sensibilus . . . dicere recusabo." According to nominalism the Trinity could be understood only as three gods, denying the unity or oneness. The great Schoolmen were able to silence the nominalists for a long period, but Occam, three centuries after Roscellinus, was able to make a theological defense, discriminating between the logical, real, and grammatical meaning of words and setting up the principle: Entities must not be multiplied unnecessarily. The existence, unity, infinity of God, Creation, and incarnation are incitious unities and cannot be supported on rational grounds, although there is a safe place for them as religious dogmas in the Christian faith in Divine revelation, according to Occam. He held that to our intellects everything real must be some particular individual thing: "quodlibet hic et nunc res." For an explanation of the grounds of the refutation of nominalism in the early times and the return to realistic views in recent times, see REALISM. W. T. Harris. nom'i-nal-ist (nŏm'ĭ-năl-ĭst), n. Metaph. An adherent of nominalism. — a. Pert. to nominalists or nominalism.

non- (nŏn-; see 2d note below). [L. non, OL. noenum, fr. neoenum, lit., not one: cf. F. non-. See NONE, pron.] A prefix in common use in English in the sense of not; un-; in-. Non- is generally less emphatic than in- or un-, being merely negative, while in- and un- are positive, often implying an opposite thing or quality. Cf. *non*religious, irreligious; *non*moral, immoral; non-Christian, unchristian.

☞ The reference "See NON-" is sometimes given as the only definition of a word beginning in non-, if its meaning can readily be gathered from the definitions of the prefix and the root word.

☞ The prefix is usually unaccented or under a secondary accent only, except in a few compounds like non'sense, non'de-script, non'suit', etc. It is, however, especially subject to contrasting stress, as in thinking and non'thinking, acid and non'acid, etc. See Guide to Pron., § 86.

Math.* Not Euclidean; specif., not assuming all the axioms and postulates assumed in the "Elements" of Euclid, but according with experience within the limits of observational error; not assuming the 11th axiom, concerning parallels; — applied to forms of space and of geometry. See EUCLIDEAN, ELLIPTIC, SPACE, HYPERBOLIC SPACE, GEOMETRY.

non'ex-ist'ence (nŏn'ĕg-zĭs'tĕns), n. 1. Absence of existence; the negation of being; nonentity. A. Baxter.

2. That which has no existence. Sir T. Browne.

non'ex-ist'ent (-tĕnt), a. Not having existence. — n. A person or thing that has no existence; a nonbeing.

non-fea'sance (nŏn-fē'zăns), n. [non- + OF. faisance a doing, fr. faire to do.] Law. Omission to do something, esp. what ought to have been done. Cf. MALFEASANCE.

non-fea'sor (-fē'zŏr), n. Law. One guilty of nonfeasance.

no-nil'lion (nō-nĭl'yŭn), n. [F., fr. L. nonus ninth + -illion, as in E. million.] In French and American notation, a thousand octillions, or a unit with thirty ciphers annexed; in English notation, a million octillions, or a unit with fifty-four ciphers annexed. See NUMERATION, Note. — no-nil'lionth (-yŭnth), n.

non-im'por-ta'tion (nŏn-ĭm'pōr-tā'shŭn), n. Want or failure of importation; refusal to import.

non'in-duc'tive (nŏn'ĭn-dŭk'tĭv), a. Not inductive, as an electrical resistance. See RESISTANCE, 4. — noninductive load, a load on an alternating-current circuit in which the current is in phase with the voltage across the load.

non-in'ter-course (nŏn-ĭn'tĕr-kōrs; 201), n. Want of intercourse; neglect or refusal to have intercourse.

non-in'ter-fer'ence (-ĭn'tĕr-fēr'ĕns), n. Failure or refusal to interfere, as in politics. (Cf. LAISSEZ FAIRE.)

non-in'ter-sec'tor (-ĭn'tĕr-sĕk'tĕr), n. Math. In the Lobachevskian geometry, any of the lines of the pencil included between the two parallels (through a point) to a line, including the parallels themselves.

non-in'ter-ven'tion (-ĭn'tĕr-vĕn'shŭn), n. State or habit of not intervening or interfering; failure or refusal to intervene. — non-in'ter-ven'tion-al-ist (-ăl-ĭst), n. — non-in'ter-ven'tion-ist, n.

non'in-tru'sion (nŏn'ĭn-trōō'zhŭn), n. Want of intrusion; refusal to intrude; specif., Ch. of Scot., the principle denying the right of intrusion. — non'in-tru'sion-ism (-ĭz'm), n. — non'in-tru'sion-ist, n.

non-join'der (nŏn-join'dĕr), n. Law. The omission of some person who ought to have been made a party to a suit, or of some cause of action which ought to be joined.

non-ju'rant (nŏn-jōō'rănt; 243), a. Eng. Hist. Nonjuring; pert. to, or characteristic of, nonjurors. — n. Eng. Hist. A nonjuror; sometimes, specif., a Presbyterian nonjuror.

non-ju'ring (-rĭng), a. [F. jurer, or L. jurare, jurari, to swear, fr. L. jus, juris. See JURY.] Not swearing allegiance; — applied to the party in Great Britain that would not swear allegiance to William and Mary, or their successors.

non-ju'ror (nŏn-jōō'rĕr; 243), n. Eng. Hist. One who refused to take a certain oath (esp. one of allegiance, supremacy, or abjuration); specif. [often cap.]: a Esp. and orig., one of those beneficed clergy in England and Scotland who refused to take the oath of allegiance to William and Mary, or to their successors, after the revolution of 1688. b Among the Scotch Presbyterians, one who refused to take the oath of abjuration (1702), as involving recognition of episcopacy; a nonabjuror. — non-ju'ror-ism (-ĭz'm), n.

non-le'gal (-lē'găl), a. Not legal; specif., not having legal qualities of any kind; not within the province of the law so as to be either required as legal or forbidden as illegal.

non'—Le-gen'dre-an (nŏn'lē-jĕn'drē-ăn), a. Math. Not accepting the theory of parallels developed in Legendre's "Éléments de géométrie" (1794), but admitting more than one noninterse ctor of a line drawn through a point in its plane. It results from rejecting the axiom of Archimedes.

non-med'ul-lat'ed (nŏn-mĕd'ŭ-lāt'ĕd), a. Not medullated; specif., Anat., without a medullary sheath. See NERVE, 2.

non'met'al (nŏn'mĕt'ăl; nŏn-mĕt'ăl), n. Chem. An element that is not a metal; any of several elements, as boron, carbon, phosphorus, nitrogen, argon, oxygen, sulphur, chlorine, bromine, etc., which do not form oxides or basic hydroxides; — called also metalloid. The nonmetals do not in general resemble the metals physically, and their chlorides, bromides, etc. (if they form such), are, unlike those of typical metals, hydrolyzed by water. Certain elements, as arsenic and antimony, which share the properties of metals and nonmetals, are by some placed in a special class called metalloids. See METAL, 2.

non'me-tal'lic (nŏn'mē-tăl'ĭk), a. 1. Not metallic.

2. Chem. Of, pert. to, or of the nature of, a nonmetal.

non-mor'al (nŏn-mŏr'ăl), a. Not moral nor immoral; not in the sphere of morals or ethics; not ethical. — non'mo-ral'i-ty (nŏn'mō-răl'ĭ-tĭ), n.

non'nat (nŏn'năt), n. [F.] a A very small, translucent, gobioid food fish (Aphia pellucida), exceedingly abundant in the Mediterranean. b The young of various other fishes caught with the true nonnat.

non-nat'u-ral (nŏn-năt'ū-răl), a. Not natural; specif.: a Old Med. Not naturally a cause of disease. See Cit.

Necessary . . . are those six nonnatural things as much spoken of amongst physicians. . . . These six nonnatural things are diet, retention and evacuation, which are more material than the other because they make new matter, or else are conversant in keeping or expelling of it. The other four are air, exercise, sleep, waking, and perturbations of the mind, which only alter the matter. Burton.

b Not belonging or conforming to the order or course of nature; not dependent on or harmonious with nature; unnatural. c Not according to the natural interpretation; forced; as, to take a word in a nonnatural sense. — non-nat'u-ral'i-ty (-răl'ĭ-tĭ), non-nat'u-ral-ness, n.

non-nat'u-rals (-rălz), n. pl. Rare in sing. 1. Old Med. The nonnatural things. See NONNATURAL, a., a.

2. Objects that are not natural. Rare.

non'ni-trog'e-nous (nŏn'nī-trŏj'ĕ-nŭs), a. Devoid of nitrogen; as, a nonnitrogenous principle. See FOOD, n., 1.

non-nu'cle-at'ed (nŏn-nū'klē-āt/ĕd), a. Without a nucleus.

‖ non ob-stan'te (nŏn ŏb-stăn'tē). [L.] 1. As an adverbial or prepositional phrase: Notwithstanding; in opposition to, or in spite of, what has been stated, or is to be stated or admitted.

2. As a noun phrase: a Law. A clause, non obstante aliquo statuo in contrarium, in old English statutes and letters patent, importing a license from the crown to do a thing, or a dispensation from the legal penalty for a thing done, notwithstanding any statute to the contrary. This prerogative was abolished by the Bill of Rights. b Eccl. Hist. A clause, non obstantibus quibuscumque privilegiis (notwithstanding any privileges whatsoever), introduced into the canon law by Innocent III. (Pope 1198–1216). It imported the setting aside of all obstacles to the enjoyment of a benefice by him who had obtained it. The clause was used also in papal bulls, and hence was imitated by King Henry III., the introducer of the clause described in a. c A dispensation or relaxation, as of a rule; also, an exception, as to a rule. Obs.

non'o-gen'a-ry (nŏn'ō-jĕn'ā-rĭ), a. [non- + L. octo eight + -genarius.] Containing nine carbon atoms ($C_9H_{18}O_2$); specif., pelargonic. non om'ni-a pos'su-mus om'nes (nŏn nĭz). [L.] We cannot all do everything. Vergil (Eclogues, VIII. 63).

‖ non om'nis mo'ri-ar. [L.] I shall not wholly die.

non'o-naph'thene (nŏn'ō-năf'thēn), n. [L. nonus ninth + naphthene.] Chem. A naphthene of the formula C_9H_{18}. See NAPHTHENE.

non'ose (nŏn'ōs), n. [L. nonus ninth + -ose.] Org. Chem. Any member of a group of sugars containing nine atoms of carbon in the molecule.

non-ox'i-dat'ing, a., non-ox'i-diz'ing, a., non-ox'yg'e-nous (nŏn'ŏk'sĭj'ĕ-nŭs), a., non-paid', a. See NON-.

V. Nordenfelt (b. 1842), Swedish inventor.] A machine gun having a number of barrels arranged side by side, all loaded at once by means of breech bolts attached to a sliding plate worked back and forth by a lever. The barrels are fired separately, but in rapid succession, the effect being that of a volley, but the recoil is not excessive. This gun has been much used in the British navy.

Nor'dic (nôr'dĭk), a. [Cf. G. & F. nord north.] Of or pert. to the Germanic peoples of northern Europe, esp. the Scandinavians and their languages. — Nordic race, Ethnol., a blond dolichocephalic race, one of the tallest in the world, found chiefly in Scandinavia, Scotland, and northern England; — so termed by J. Deniker. Cf. TEUTON.

nord'mark-ite (nôrd'märk-īt), n. [From Nordmark, Sweden.] 1. Petrog. An alkalic variety of syenite containing some quartz, and first described from Norway.

2. Min. A variety of staurolite containing manganese.

Nor'folk (nôr'fŏk), n. 1. An eastern county of England.

2. Short for NORFOLK JACKET.

Norfolk capon, a red herring. Jocose, Eng. — N. dumpling. Eng. a A kind of boiled dumpling made in Norfolk. b A native or inhabitant of Norfolk. — N. jacket, a kind of loose-fitting plaited jacket, having a loose belt, worn chiefly as a sporting dress. — N. plover, the stone curlew. — N. spaniel, one of a breed of field spaniels similar to the clumbers, but shorter in body and of a liver-and-white or black-and-white color. — N. wherry. See WHERRY c.

Norfolk Island pine. a A handsome pinaceous tree of Australia and Norfolk Island (Araucaria excelsa), with whorls of horizontal branches densely set with deep green awl-shaped leaves. It is often cultivated in pots, seldom exceeding a few feet in height, though in its native home it grows 200 feet high. b Any other species of Araucaria.

no'ri-a (nō'rĭ-ă), n. [Sp., fr. Ar. nā'ūrah.] A large water wheel turned by a stream without a fall and carrying at its circumference buckets which raise water and discharge it into a trough; a Persian wheel. It is used in Spain, the Levant, China, etc.

nor'land (nôr'lănd), n. [For northland.] [often cap.]

1. The land in the north; north country. Chiefly Poetic.

2. = NORLANDER. Scot. & Eng.

norm (nôrm), n. [L. norma a rule. See NORMAL, a.] 1. A rule or authoritative standard; model; type; pattern.

2. Math. a A rational integer, the continued product in any corpus of an integer by its conjugates. b In Dedekind's theory of ideals, the number of classes into which all the integers of a corpus may be sorted, so that any two elements of any class are congruent (that is, their difference is an element of the ideal I) and no two elements of different classes are congruent.

3. Standard mineral composition. See PETROGRAPHY.

nor'ma (nôr'mă), n.; L. pl. -MÆ (-mē). [L.] 1. A norm; a pattern or rule; a model; a standard. J. S. Mill.

2. A mason's or a carpenter's square or rule.

3. A template or gauge.

4. [cap.] Astron. A southern constellation between Scorpio and Triangulum.

nor'mal (nôr'măl), a. [L. normalis, fr. norma rule, pattern, carpenter's square; prob. akin to noscere to know; cf. Gr. γνώριμος well known, γνώμων gnomon, also, carpenter's square. See KNOW; cf. ENORMOUS.] 1. Geom. According to a square or rule; perpendicular; forming a right angle. Specif.: Of or pertaining to a normal.

2. According to, constituting, or not deviating from, an established norm, rule, or principle; conformed to a type, standard, or regular form; performing the proper functions; not abnormal; regular; natural; analogical.

Deviations from the normal type. Hallam.

3. Econ. Pertaining or conforming to a more or less permanent standard, from which, if the individual phenomena deviate on either side, such deviations are to be regarded as self-corrective. Thus, in economics, the normal price is a price which corresponds to cost of production. In economics, natural and normal are sometimes used as synonymous; but the use of the word natural involves certain metaphysical assumptions which are not connoted by the term normal.

4. Chem. a Anal. Chem. Denoting a solution of such strength that one liter contains one gram atom of replaceable hydrogen or its equivalent. One liter of a normal solution contains, of a monobasic acid or monacid base, the molecular weight in grams, of a dibasic acid or diacid base, half the gram molecular weight, etc. Abbr.: N or n (normal), $\frac{N}{10}$ or $\frac{n}{10}$ (decinormal or tenth-normal), $\frac{N}{50}$ or $\frac{n}{50}$ (fiftieth-normal), etc. b Denoting certain assumed fundamental compounds, as acids from which the real acids are obtained by dehydration; thus, normal sulphuric acid and normal nitric acid are respectively $S(OH)_6$, and $N(OH)_5$. c Denoting a salt that contains neither basic hydroxyl nor acid hydrogen; neutral; as, normal silver phosphate, Ag_3PO_4. d Org. Chem. Denoting that one of a series of isomeric hydrocarbons or hydrocarbon derivatives in which no carbon atom is united with more than two other carbon atoms; as, normal pentane, hexane, etc. Cf. ISO-.

Myth. & Folklore.* One of the demigoddesses or divine giantesses who preside over and determine the fates of both men and gods. Orig., there appears to have been but one Norn, called by the Anglo-Saxons Wyrd and by the Norse Urth, and her character was conceived in a gloomy light, making her name often equivalent to death doom (cf. HEL). Later, two others were added, making the Norse trio Urth, Verthandi, and Skuld, or Past, Present, and Future, in England represented by the Weird Sisters of Macbeth. To one of these give the blessings, the third the ills, of life. Sometimes the Norns were conceived as more numerous, in the legend of Sleeping Beauty being represented as thirteen wise women. In late Norse sagas they were represented as dwelling beside a fountain under a root of Yggdrasill; usually they were conceived as spinners, weaving the fabric of fate. Cf. FATE, n., 4.

NASAL, NASTURTIUM, NESS, NOSTRIL, NOZZLE, NUZZLE.] 1. a In man, the prominent part of the face which bears the nostrils and covers the anterior part of the nasal passages or fossæ. b In animals, a corresponding part of the head; the snout, muzzle, or muffle.

2. The olfactory organ of vertebrates. In most classes of vertebrates it consists of a pair of cavities or passages (the nasal fossæ) in the head, which are lined with mucous membrane, part of which receives branches of the olfactory nerves and forms the essential organ of smell. In animals above fishes the nasal fossæ open anteriorly by the nostrils or anterior nares (or by a single nostril in some cetaceans) and posteriorly into the mouth or pharynx by the posterior nares, and serve also as respiratory passages. In most fishes the nasal cavities are represented by small sacs on the sides of the head in front of the eyes, each having two nostrils or openings to the exterior, but no communication with the mouth, and no function in respiration. In cyclostomes there is a single median nasal cavity, but it is supplied with paired olfactory nerves. The sensory epithelium of the nose develops from invaginated epiblast.

3. Sense, power, or faculty of smelling; hence, scent.

4. Odor, as of hay; perfume. Dial. Eng.

Notation has been devised to indicate pitch, metrical length, rhythm, tempo, accent or force, harmonic combinations, style, and specific directions about performance. The oldest system known is the alphabetical notation of the Greeks, in which the tones of a melody were represented by letters, variously written, as upright, inverted, etc., to denote naturals, sharps, etc., and to which certain time and accent signs were added. Letters were used to denote fixed pitch in the later medieval tablatures, and are still so used, as under pitch and elsewhere in this book. The next important step, however, was in the early medieval neumes, denoting relative pitch, and in the transient system of Hucbald (10th century), who wrote syllables to be sung between parallel lines, marking the spaces T or S for "tone" (step) or semitone. The addition of lines denoting fixed pitch to the neumes resulted in the modern staff system, in which a clef gives to lines and spaces their pitch, which may be chromatically altered by accidentals. Notation of time values was developed in the system of mensurable music with ligatures, which gave rise to time signatures, while metrical accent came to be marked throughout by the bar. Rhythm may be represented by special symbols (as ^, –, f, p., etc.) and special directions as to manner of performance, by the staccato mark, slur, repeat, pedal sign, etc. Harmony has a kind of numerical shorthand in the system of thorough bass.

note (nōt), n. [F. note, L. nota mark.] 1. Mus. a A character used to indicate a certain tone, esp., in modern staff notation, one showing by its form the relative length, and by its position the pitch, of a tone. Notes now have from one to three parts : the head, the stem, and the hooks, or pennants, which may run together between two or more notes. These parts distinguish the following notes in present general use: semibreve, or 𝅝 ; minim, or 𝅗𝅥 ; whole note, half note, crotchet, or ♩ ; quaver, or ♪ ; semiquaver, or 𝅘𝅥𝅯 ; quarter note, eighth note, sixteenth note, demisemiquaver, or 𝅘𝅥𝅰 ; hemidemisemiquaver, thirty-second note, or sixty-fourth note,

Their time value may be modified by various marks, as the dot, tie, hold, and staccato. Their pitch value is taken from the staff degree — with its modifying sharp, flat, etc. — on which they are placed. In Gregorian music the older large, long, breve, and semibreve are still sometimes used. See NOTATION, 5 b. b Inaccurately, a key of a pianoforte or similar instrument. 2. A musical sound ; specif. : a A melody or strain ; tune ; song. Now Poetical. b The song or musical call of a bird. c A tone of definite pitch, as of a musical instrument or the human voice in singing.

no'to-cen'trous (-sĕn'trŭs), a. [See NOTO-; CENTRUM.] Zoöl. Designating a vertebra whose centrum is formed exclusively of interdorsal arcualia. See ARCUALIA.

no'to-chord (nō'tō-kôrd), n. [noto- + chord.] Zoöl. A longitudinal elastic rod of cells which in the lowest vertebrates (as Amphioxus and the lampreys), and in the embryos of the higher vertebrates, forms the supporting and stiffening axis of the body; the chorda dorsalis. It represents in function and position the future backbone of the higher forms, and serves as a structural basis around which the bodies of the vertebræ are formed. The notochord develops typically from the hypoblast at a very early stage, as a median longitudinal dorsal outgrowth of the wall of the primitive alimentary tract. In the adult of the higher vertebrates it becomes almost obliterated as the bodies of the vertebræ develop. See SPINAL COLUMN. A well-developed notochord is present in the caudal region of larval ascidians, and a structure possibly homologous occurs in the Adelochorda. Both of these groups are placed with the Vertebrata in a phylum, Chordata, largely for this reason.

no'to-chor'dal (nō'tō-kôr'dăl), a. Zoöl. Of or pertaining to the notochord; having a notochord.

No'to-don'ti-dæ (-dŏn'tĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.; noto- + Gr. ὀδούς, ὀδόντος, tooth.] Zoöl. An extensive family of moths similar to the Noctuidæ, from which they are distinguished chiefly by the venation of the fore wings. The larvæ are usually naked and often of grotesque form, having humps, spines, or fleshy processes. Cf. PUSS MOTH, LOBSTER MOTH. — no'to-don'ti-an (-shĭ-ăn), no'to-don'tid (-tĭd), no'to-don'toid (-toid), a. & n.

One of the Notodontidæ (Œdemasia concinna) which attacks the Apple Tree. a Larva; b Adult.

No'to-gæ'a (-jē'ȧ), n. [NL.; Gr. νότος the south + γαῖα the earth.] Zoögeog. A certain realm, or primary terrestrial division. It includes (according to those recognizing only two such realms) the New Zealand, Australian, and Neotropical regions, or (according to those recognizing three) the New Zealand and Australian regions. Cf. ARCTOGÆA, and NEOGÆA. — No'to-gæ'an, or -ge'an (-ăn), No'to-gæ'al, or -ge'al (-ăl), a. — No'to-ge'ic, or -ge'ic (-jē'ĭk), a.

no'to-po'di-um (-pō'dĭ-ŭm), n.; L. pl. -DIA (-ȧ). [NL.; noto- + Gr. πόδιον, dim. of πούς, ποδός, the foot.] Zoöl. The dorsal lobe or branch of a parapodium. See PARAPODIUM. — no'to-po'dal (-ăl), a.

no'to-ri'e-ty (nō'tō-rī'ĕ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [Cf. F. notoriété. See NOTORIOUS.] 1. Quality or state of being notorious, or generally or publicly known; — commonly in an unfavorable sense; as, the notoriety of a crime.
2. A well-known, noted, or famous person.

no-to'ri-ous (nō-tō'rĭ-ŭs; 201), a. [LL. notorius; cf. L. notoria, -rium, information; fr. L. noscere, notum, to know. See KNOW.] 1. Generally known and talked of; well, widely, or commonly known; forming a part of common knowledge; noted; universally recognized; — usually unfavorable in sense; as, a notorious thief, vice, fact.
2. Evident; manifest; conspicuous. Obs.
Syn. — Conspicuous, noted, notable. See FAMOUS. notorious conveyance. Law. See CONVEYANCE.
— no-to'ri-ous-ly, adv. — no-to'ri-ous-ness, n.

No-tor'nis (nō-tôr'nĭs), n. [NL.; Gr. νότος the south + ὄρνις bird.] Zoöl. A genus of flightless birds allied to the gallinules. N. mantelli of New Zealand was first known as a fossil bird, but later a few individuals of a closely allied, if distinct, species (N. hochstetteri) were found living on the South Island. N. albus, a white species, inhabited Norfolk and Lord Howe Islands.

no'tour (nō'tŏr), a. [F. notoire. See NOTORIOUS.] Open; notorious; — now used only in notour bankruptcy, Scots Law, the bankruptcy that arises under certain circumstances which are particularly defined by statutes and which make the bankrupt liable to involuntary sequestration or cession.

‖ No'tre Dame' (nō'tr' dȧm'). [F.] Our Lady; the Virgin Mary; — used esp. in names of French churches; hence, a church dedicated to her, as the noted cathedral of Paris, built chiefly in the early 13th century. Its west front is one of the finest in the Gothic style.

not'sell' (nŏt'sĕlf'), n. Metaph. That which is other than, or objective to, the self.

no'tum (nō'tŭm), n.; pl. NOTA (-tȧ). [NL., fr. Gr. νῶτον.] Zoöl. The back; specif., the dorsal surface of a thoracic segment of an insect.

not'with-stand'ing (nŏt'wĭth-stănd'ĭng), adv. & conj. Nevertheless; however; yet; although; as, I shall go, notwithstanding you forbid me.

I will surely rend the kingdom from thee. . . . Notwithstanding, in thy days I will not do it. 1 Kings xi. 11, 12.

notwithstanding that, notwithstanding; although.
These days were ages to him; notwithstanding that he was basking in the smiles of pretty Mary. Irving.

not'with-stand'ing, prep. [Orig. the participle of withstand, with not prefixed.] Without prevention or obstruction from or by; in spite of; as, he went, notwithstanding the prohibition. Notwithstanding was originally a participle absolute corresponding to the Latin non obstante, and is still so taken when it follows the noun or demonstrative pronoun with which it is construed; as in, he persisted, threats notwithstanding. When it precedes, it is construed as a preposition (cf. CONCERNING, DURING). When it stands without the noun or demonstrative, it becomes the conjunction or adverb.
Syn. — NOTWITHSTANDING, IN SPITE OF, DESPITE are often interchangeable. NOTWITHSTANDING, the least emphatic, implies the presence of an obstacle; IN SPITE OF suggests active opposition or strongly adverse considerations to be encountered; DESPITE is somewhat lighter in its emphasis than in spite of; as, notwithstanding the rain, I shall go; I shall go in spite of the rain; "Only see me through now, do it in the face of this and in spite of it" (H. James); "It is in spite of, not because of, these scenes that Henry IV. is called a chronicle play" (W. A. Neilson); despite his assurances, I doubted him.

nou'me-nal (nōō'mē-năl; nou'mē-năl), a. Metaph. Of or pert. to the noumenon or noumena; — opposed to phenomenal. — nou'me-nal-ly, adv. — noumenal idealism, the metaphysics of those who suppose all known things to be mental, but not all phenomenal in the Kantian sense, because a noumenon is knowable so long as by a noumenon we mean some mental being or other which we somehow can discover beyond phenomena. Encyc. Brit.

nou'me-nal-ism (-ĭz'm), n. The doctrine of the existence of noumena, or things-in-themselves. — nou'me-nal-ist, n.

nou'me-non (nōō'mē-nŏn; nou'-; 271), n.; pl. -NA (-nȧ). [NL., fr. Gr. νοούμενον thing perceived, p. pr. pass. of νοεῖν to perceive, νοῦς mind.] Metaph. a An object of rational intuition; that which is apprehended as an object solely by the understanding, apart from any mediation through sense. b The unknowable real object, substance, or thing-in-itself which the mind posits as the basis, ground, or cause of phenomena; the nature of reality apart from sensible qualities.

In affirming, therefore, the existence of a noumenon, we affirm causation. J. S. Mill.

noun (noun), n. [OF. nun, non, nom, F. nom, fr. L. nomen name. See NAME.] Gram. Primarily, a word that names any subject of discourse, esp. a thing, material or mental, as distinguished from a quality or occurrence; hence, any word that may be subject of a verb or object of a verb or preposition. Thus, man, crowd, sand, John, action, humanity, are nouns. Any other part of speech or a phrase or clause so used is regarded as a noun, as in: "Have no ifs nor buts about it." "That you are wrong is plain." Some grammarians, though less commonly now, use noun to include the adjective, and make the distinction of noun substantive and noun adjective. Nouns are commonly classified as abstract, common, collective, proper. See under these terms.

noun'al (-ăl), a. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature or quality of, a noun. — noun'al-ly, adv.

nous (nōōs; nous), n. [NL., fr. Gr. νοῦς mind.] 1. Philos. The reason; the highest intellect; God as the World Reason. Anaxagoras was the author of the doctrine of reason or Nous as world principle, though he conceived it as the principle of the order of nature, hence as an objective quality, rather than as reason in a psychological sense. In Plato (Timæus) the human reason is represented as participating in the divine reason, and Plato was the first to free the conception from materiality, making it purely teleological, although it still possessed the objectivity attaching to the nature of ideas. In Aristotle (De Anim., III.) the passive reason (νοῦς παθητικός) includes sense perception, memory, imagination, and reflection; but the poetic, or creative, reason (νοῦς ποιητικός), the agent intellect of the Scholastics, is the pure reason whose activity is theoretic (i. e., beholding what is divine) (Metaph., XI. 7, θεωρεῖν) of God always and of man sometimes (when thinking "first philosophy," or "theology"). The most important later conception of the Nous was that of the Neoplatonists who distinguished in the One, the divine being, a One above Reason or Mind, from the divine reason. This divine reason, the first emanation or first creation of the Supreme Being, was identified by some of the Gnostics with Christ, as the first-born of the unbegotten Father, his human form being taken not as real, but only as appearance. W. T. Harris.

2. Mental quickness or cleverness; ready wit; intelligence. Humorous or Colloq.

It requires an eye quick at discovering a weak point, and "nous" to calculate and decide the chances of a successful passage.

nov'a (nō'vȧ), n.; pl. L. NOVÆ (-vē), E. NOVAS (-vȧz). [L., fem. sing. of novus new.] Astron. A new star, usually appearing suddenly, shining for a brief period, and then sinking into obscurity. Such appearances are supposed to result from cosmic collisions, as of a dark star with interstellar nebulosities. The most important modern novæ are: — ‖ No'va Co-ro'næ Bo're-a'lis (kō-rō'nē bō'rē-ā'lĭs) [1866]; ‖ No'va Cyg'ni (sĭg'nī) [1876]; ‖ No'va An-dro'me-dæ (ăn-drŏm'ē-dē) [1885]; ‖ No'va Au-ri'gæ (ô-rī'jē) [1891–92]; ‖ No'va Per'se-i (pûr'sē-ī) [1901]. There are two novæ called Nova Persei. They are: a A small nova which appeared in 1887. b An extraordinary nova which appeared in Perseus in 1901. It was first sighted on February 22, and for one night (February 23) was the brightest star in the sky. By July it had almost disappeared, after which faint surrounding nebulous masses were discovered, apparently moving radially outward from the star at incredible velocity.

no-vac'u-lite (nō-văk'ū-līt), n. [L. novacula a sharp knife, razor.] Petrog. A very hard, fine-grained siliceous rock used for whetstones. It is thought to be of sedimentary origin.

no-vate' (nō-vāt'; nō'vāt), v. t. & i. [L. novatus, p. p. of novare to make new.] To put something new in place of; specif., Law, esp. Civil Law, to grant or dispose of by novation; to make a novation; to make a novation of.

No-va'tian (nō-vā'shăn), n. Eccl. Hist: One of a sect founded by Novatian (L. Novatianus), a presbyter of Rome, who, representing the sterner portion of the congregation, was elected by them bishop when Cornelius was elected bishop in 251, thus starting a schism, which lasted until the 6th or 7th century. The Novatians, calling themselves "The Pure," held that the lapsed might not be received again into communion with the church, and later that second marriages are unlawful. — No-va'tian, a. — No-va'tian-ism (-ĭz'm), n. — No-va'tian-ist, n.

The Novatians made a distinction between forgiveness by God and reception into the communion of the church. The one might take place without the other. The church must guard its purity with sedulous care. G. P. Fisher.

3. Law. The substitution of a new obligation for an old one, by substituting either: (1) a new obligation between the same parties; or (2) a new debtor in place of the old one (then specifically called a delegation); or (3) a new creditor in place of the old one. The two latter forms are usually called an assignment in English law. The term novation is used chiefly by civilians.

nov'el (nŏv'ĕl), a. [OF. novel, F. nouvel, nouveau, L. novellus, dim. of novus new. See NEW.] 1. New; not old or ancient; of recent origin or introduction; newly made, acquired, etc. Obs. "His novel crown." Marlowe.

2. New; not formerly known; of a new kind or character; hence, out of the ordinary course; unusual; strange. Syn. — See NEW.

novel assignment, Pleading, a new assignment or specification of the cause of action set forth in a previous assignment, as where more certainty or particularity is required. —n. disseizin, or, in full, assize of novel disseizin, Eng. Law, a real action (abolished by 3 & 4 Will. IV., c. 27, 1833) granted by Henry II., prob. in 1166, for the recovery of land from which the possessor had been recently disseized. It was brought by a writ bidding the sheriff to summon a jury of twelve men to declare whether the defendant had unjustly disseized the plaintiff. It had a large influence on the development of common-law civil procedure.

2. pl. News; fresh tidings; sing., a piece of news. Obs.

3. [It. novella.] A novella; — usually in pl.; as, the novels of Boccaccio. Now Rare.

4. [F. nouvelle a short story, or It. novella.] A fictitious prose tale or narrative of considerable length, in which characters and actions professing to represent those of real life are portrayed in a plot; also, now generically with the, the type of literature constituted or exemplified by such tales: prose fiction of this sort. Novels usually deal with the passions, esp. love, and are typically of sufficient length to fill one or more volumes. Cf. ROMANCE.

5. pl. [cap.] Rom. Law. Certain ordinances of Justinian which were the last issued of those constituting the Corpus Juris Civilis (which see). They were mostly issued in Greek, but not officially compiled, and a Latin text, called the Liber Authenticum, became the authoritative one.

Syn. — NOVEL, ROMANCE were in earlier usage rather sharply contrasted with reference to subject matter, style, and length; as, "The novel is a picture of real life and manners, and of the times in which it is written. The romance, in lofty and elevated language, describes what never happened nor is likely to happen" (Clara Reeve); "A novel is a kind of abbreviation of a romance" (Chesterfield). In more recent usage the distinction, though somewhat effaced, is occasionally met with, as stated in the citation below. See STORY, FICTION.

In a not very precise way the novel and the romance are still brought into an antithesis similar to Clara Reeve's. That prose fiction which deals realistically with actual life is called, in criticism and conversation, preëminently the novel. That prose fiction which deals with life in a false or fantastic manner, or represents it in the setting of strange, improbable, or impossible adventures, or idealizes the virtues and the vices of human nature, is called romance. W. L. Cross.

nov'el-ette' (nŏv'ĕl-ĕt'), n. [Dim. of novel, n. See NOVEL.] 1. A little or short novel; a story of no great length having the construction of a novel.

2. Music. A kind of pianoforte piece of free form and typically of exuberant character, containing a considerable number of themes; as, Schumann's novelettes.

nov'el-ist, n. [Cf. F. nouvelliste, It. novellista.] 1. In Obs. senses: a An innovator; an asserter or favorer of novelty. b A novice or beginner. c A bearer of news; a newsmonger.

2. A writer of a novel or novels.

nov'el-is'tic (-ĭs'tĭk), a. Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of, novels. — nov'el-is'ti-cal-ly (-tĭ-kăl-ĭ), adv.

nov'el-i-za'tion (-ĭ-zā'shŭn; -ī-zā'shŭn), n. Act or process of novelizing; conversion into a novel.

nov'el-ize (nŏv'ĕl-īz), v. t.; -IZED (-īzd); -IZ'ING (-īz'ĭng). 1. To make or render novel, or new. Obs.

2. To put into the form of a novel; to portray by novels; to convert into a novel. "To novelize history." Sir J. Herschel.

nov'el-ize, v. i. To innovate. Obs.

‖ no-vel'la (nō-vĕl'lȧ), n.; pl. -LE (-lā). [It.] A kind of tale, narrative, or story, characterized by a compact plot with a point; — an Italian term often used in English to distinguish such a tale from a romance. The novella requires a simple subject matter and disdains episodes, differing further from the romance in concerning itself with the character of its heroes only so far as this is revealed in the plot, in creating a greater interest in things than in persons, in having an elegant brevity of style, and in the plot itself being a work of art, not made so by the art of the writer. The stories of Boccaccio's "Decameron" are typical novelle. Chaucer's "Pardoner's Tale" is a good English example of the novella.

nov'el-ty (nŏv'ĕl-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [OF. novelté, F. nouveauté, L. novellitas.] 1. Quality or state of being novel; newness; freshness; recentness of origin or introduction. "Novelty is the great parent of pleasure." South.

No-vem'ber (nō-vĕm'bĕr), n. [L. November, or Novembris (sc. mensis), the ninth month of the old Roman year, fr. novem nine: cf. F. Novembre. See NINE.] The eleventh month of the year, having thirty days.

‖ no-ve'na (nō-vē'nȧ), n.; pl. -NÆ (-nē). [LL., fr. L. novem nine. Cf. NOVENE.] R. C. Ch. A nine days' devotion for any religious object.

nov'e-na-ry (nŏv'ē-nā-rĭ), a. [L. novenarius, fr. novem nine.] Of or pert. to the number nine; consisting of nine. —n. a A set or sum of nine; nine, collectively. b = NOVENA.

nov'ice (nŏv'ĭs), n. [F., fr. L. novicius, novitius, new, fr. novus new. See NEW.] 1. Eccl. One who has entered a religious house and is on probation; one who is a candidate for admission into an order; a probationer.

No poor cloisterer, nor no novice . . . Chaucer.

2. One newly received into the church, or one newly converted to the Christian faith. 1 Tim. iii. 6.

3. One new in any business, profession, or calling; one unacquainted or unskilled; one yet in the rudiments; a beginner; tyro. "A novice in the trade." Dryden.

4. In competitions, a person or animal that has never won a prize in the class in which he or it is entered.

Syn.,—Neophyte, beginner, learner, apprentice; sciolist,—NOVICE, TYRO are often used without distinction. But NOVICE commonly suggests inexperience, esp. in something which has to be done; TYRO suggests rudimentary acquaintance, esp. with something which has to be learned; as, a novice in golf, the veriest tyro knows better; "You must from your years be a novice in affliction, whereas I have served a long apprenticeship to misery" (Fielding); "The management of tyros of eighteen is difficult" (Cowper). See AMATEUR, CONVERT.

nowhere near or, Archaic or Dial., nigh, not nearly; not by a great deal. — to be n. Slang. a To be badly beaten, or left behind. b To be utterly at a loss. Rare. U. S.

no'whith'er (nō'hwĭth'ẽr), adv. [no, adv. + whither; AS. nāhwider.] To or toward no place; nowhere.

no'wise' (-wīz'), adv. [no, a. + wise. See WISE, n.] Not in any manner or degree; in no way; noways.

nowt (nout), n. sing. & pl. [Of Scand. origin; cf. Icel. naut, akin to E. neat cattle. Cf. NOLT.] 1. pl. Neat cattle; oxen.

2. sing. An ox or bullock.

now'y (nou'ĭ), a. [F. noué knotted. Cf. NOWED.] Her. Having a projection or curvature in or near the middle; — said of a line, cross, or other bearing.

nox'al (nŏk'săl), a. [L. noxalis, fr. noxa injury.] Injurious or harmful; causing, or pertaining to, damage or an injury; — chiefly used as a Roman or medieval law term. — noxal action, an action brought against a person to recover damages or compel a noxal surrender. — n. surrender, the surrender of a person (as a slave or child) or thing (as an ox or an inanimate object) that has done damage to the damaged person, in satisfaction of his damage or injury; also, the right, as among the Romans and in medieval Europe, to make this surrender in full satisfaction of damages.

nox'ious (nŏk'shŭs), a. [L. noxius, fr. noxa harm; akin to nocere to hurt. Cf. NUISANCE, NECROMANCY.] 1. Hurtful; harmful; baneful; pernicious; injurious; destructive; unwholesome; insalubrious; as, noxious air or food; pernicious; corrupting to morals; as, noxious examples.

Too frequent an appearance in places of public resort is noxious to spiritual promotions. Swift.

2. Guilty; criminal. Obs. & R. Abp. Bramhall.

Syn. — Noisome, mischievous, corrupting, baneful, unwholesome, insalubrious, deleterious. See PERNICIOUS.

‖ noy'au' (nwȧ'yō'), n. [F., prop., the stone or nut of a fruit. See NEWEL a post.] A liqueur made from brandy and flavored with, or in imitation of, cherry or peach kernels. There are two varieties, white and pink.

noz'zle (nŏz'l), n. [A dim. of nose.] 1. The socket for the candle on a candlestick or sconce. Now Rare.

2. The projecting vent of anything; a small spout, projecting part with an opening, mouthpiece, terminal pipe, or the like; nose; as, the nozzle of a bellows.

3. Specif.: a A short tube, usually tapering, forming the vent of a hose or pipe. b A short outlet, or inlet, pipe at the end or side of a hollow vessel, as of a teapot or of a steam-engine cylinder.

4. The nose; the snout. Slang as used of persons.

5. A projecting part; a small beak or nose.

noz'zle, v. t. & i.; NOZ'ZLED (-'ld); NOZ'ZLING (-lĭng). To furnish with a nozzle; also, to press the nozzle or nose against; to push the nozzle or beak about.

Hungry birds will force their way into . . . sedge tangle to spatter and nozzle for food. Pall Mall Mag.

Nu (nōō), n. In Egyptian cosmogony, the primeval fluid or chaos out of which the world was created, personified as a god. Cf. CHAOS, 2; TIAMAT.

Nua'da (nōō'ȧ), n. Celt. Myth. In Irish legend, a king of the Tuatha De Danann. He lost his hand in the battle in which the Firbolgs were overthrown, and, though it was replaced by one of silver, he was deposed on account of the blemish. Bress, the Fomor, was chosen in his place. When Bress was deposed, Nuada was again chosen king, but was slain by Balor in the battle with the Fomors. He was probably an early war god.

‖ nu'ance' (nū'ȧnsʼ), n.; pl. NUANCES (F. nū'ȧnsʼ). [F.] A shade of difference; a slight variation or difference, as in expression, feeling, color, or tone; a delicate gradation.

nub (nŭb), n. [Cf. Dan. knub block, log, LG. knubbe knot, and E. KNUB, KNOB.] 1. = KNUB, 2.

2. A knob; a protuberance; knub; lump.

3. The point or gist, as of a story. Colloq., U. S.

nub'bin (-ĭn), n. [Cf. NUB a knob.] 1. U. S. a Any small or imperfect ear of Indian corn; — applied in some localities to those having at least some perfect seeds, in others to those entirely abortive. b Any imperfect or undeveloped fruit, as a strawberry, an apple, etc.

2. The stump of a tree. Dial. Eng.

nub'ble (-'l), n. [Dim. of nub a knob.] A small nub, or knob; a small lump; often, locally, a knoblike islet.

nu-bec'u-la (nū-bĕk'ū-lȧ), n.; L. pl. -LÆ (-lē). [L., dim. of nubes cloud.] 1. Med. a A cloudy formation or appearance in urine. b A cloudy speck or a spot on the cornea.

2. Astron. a A nebula. b pl. [cap.] Specif., the two Magellanic clouds (which see), called respectively nubecula major and nubecula minor.

nu'bi-a (nū'bĭ-ȧ), n. [From L. nubes cloud.] A light fleecy wrap worn over the head and neck by women; a cloud.

Nu'bi-an (-ăn), a. Of or pert. to Nubia, in eastern Africa. Nubian afterglow, a secondary twilight sometimes seen in the Nubian desert, caused by rereflection of rays dispersed through the atmosphere in the primary twilight.

Nu'bi-an, n. 1. One of the people of Nubia; esp., a member of one of the group of Negroid tribes who were early Christianized and who formed a powerful empire between Egypt and Abyssinia from the 6th to the 14th century, when they were conquered by the Arabs and converted to Mohammedanism; also, their Negro language.

2. A Nubian horse.

nu-bif'er-ous (nū-bĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. [L. nubifer; nubes cloud + ferre to bear: cf. F. nubifère.] Bringing or producing clouds.

nu'bile (nū'bĭl), a. [L. nubilis, fr. nubere to marry: cf. F. nubile. See NUPTIAL.] Marriageable; — said of females, or of age. — nu-bil'i-ty (nū-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n.

nu-cel'lar (nū-sĕl'ȧr), a. Bot. Of or pert. to the nucellus.

nu-cel'lus (-ŭs), n.; pl. -LI (-ī). [NL., dim. of nux, nucis, a nut.] Bot. The mass of thin-walled parenchymatous cells composing the central and chief part of the body of an ovule. It contains the embryo sac, and is surrounded by the external coats of the ovule, with which it is united at the point called the chalaza. See OVULE.

nu'cha (nū'kȧ), n.; L. pl. NUCHÆ (-kē). [LL., spinal marrow, Ar. nukhā'.] 1. a The spinal cord. Obs. b The nape of the neck.

2. Zoöl. In insects, the hind part of the thorax which bears the petiole of the abdomen.

nu'chal (nū'kăl), a. [Cf. F. nucal. See NUCHA.] Anat. & Zoöl. Pertaining to, or in the region of, the back, or nape, of the neck; in insects, situated on the back of the prothorax just behind the head; also, pertaining to the nucha.

nuci-. Combining form from Latin nux, nucis, meaning nut.

nu-cif'er-ous (nū-sĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. Of, pert. to, or constituting, a nucleus; as, the nuclear spindle or the nuclear fibrils of a cell; the nuclear part of a comet, etc. — nuclear layer (of the cerebellum), Anat., the granular layer. — n. membrane, Biol., the membrane by which a nucleus is surrounded. — n. plate. Biol. a = EQUATORIAL PLATE. b The dividing wall of the nucleus in free cell formation. c The wall that divides the nucleus in some forms of amitosis. — nuclear sap, Biol., the more fluid ground substance of nucleoplasm. — n. spindle, Biol., the spindle-shaped figure formed in mitosis. — n. stain, Biol., any stain having an affinity for chromatin, and hence staining conspicuously the nuclei of cells.

nu'cle-ate (-āt), v. t.; -ATED (-āt'ĕd); -AT'ING (-āt'ĭng). [Cf. L. nucleare to become kernelly.] To form into a nucleus; to gather as a nucleus or central body.

nu'cle-ate, v. i. To form, or gather about, a nucleus.

nu'cle-at'ed (-āt'ĕd), a. 1. Having a nucleus; nucleate.

2. Gathered or clustered together about a nucleus.

nu'cle-a'tion (-ā'shŭn), n. Act or process of nucleating, or state of being nucleated; formation of nuclei.

nu-cle'ic (nū-klē'ĭk), a. Physiol. Chem. Pert. to or designating any of a group of acids rich in phosphorus, occurring uncombined in some nuclei, as in spermatozoa, in others combined with a proteid, forming nuclein. They are white and amorphous, and yield as cleavage products phosphoric acid and nuclein bases, and in some cases carbohydrates.

nu'cle-i-form' (nū'klē-ĭ-fôrm'; nū-klē'ĭ-fôrm), a. [L. nucleus kernel + -form.] a Like a nucleus. b Bot. Tuberculate, as the apothecia of certain lichens.

nu'cle-in (nū'klē-ĭn), n. Physiol. Chem. Any of a group of colorless amorphous substances found in all cell nuclei, esp. in the chromatin portion, and obtained by the peptic digestion of cells or of nucleoproteids. They are compound proteids rich in phosphorus, and yield, on decomposition with alkali, proteids and nucleic acid. Called also true nuclein, in distinction from paranuclein.

nuclein base. Physiol. Chem. Any of a class of basic purine bodies, such as xanthine, guanine, adenine, and hypoxanthine, which are formed as cleavage products from true nucleins when the latter are boiled with dilute acid.

nu'cle-o- (nū'klē-ō-). A combining form denoting connection with, or relation to, a nucleus or nuclei.

nu'cle-o-al-bu'min (-ăl-bū'mĭn), n. [nucleo- + albumin.] Physiol. Chem. Any of a group of proteids of weak acid nature, of wide occurrence in plants and animals, esp. in cells. They are rich in phosphorus, but differ from the nucleoproteids in not yielding nuclein bases. Most nucleoalbumins yield paranucleins by peptic digestion.

nu'cle'o-lar (nū'klē'ō-lȧr), a. Biol. Of or pertaining to, or of the nature of, a nucleolus.

nu'cle-o-late (nū'klē-ō-lāt) } a. Having a nucleus or nu'cle-o-lat'ed (nū'klē-ō-lāt'ĕd) } nucleoli.

nu-cle'o-lus (nū-klē'ō-lŭs), n.; L. pl. -LI (-lī). [L., a little nut, dim. of nucleus.] a A comparatively large and conspicuous, usually rounded body, found in the nucleus of most cells. More than one may be present. Under the term nucleolus have been included a variety of bodies the nature and functions of which are in many cases not understood. Those which stain with cytoplasmic stains have been distinguished as true nucleoli, or plasmosomes; others (which appear to be nodes or knots in the chromatic network, and stain with nuclear stains) as karyosomes; while in a few cases (as certain Protozoa) they appear to be true intranuclear centrosomes. The nucleolus or the germinal vesicle is called the germinal spot. b A micronucleus. Obs.

nu'cle-o-plasm (nū'klē-ō-plăz'm), n. [nucleo- + -plasm.] Biol. a The reticular substance of the nucleus of an egg. b = KARYOPLASM. c The ground substance of a cell nucleus. See NUCLEUS, 4. — nu'cle-o-plas'mic (-plăz'mĭk), nu'cle-o-plas-mat'ic (-plăz-măt'ĭk), a.

nu'cle-o-pro'te-id (-prō'tē-ĭd), n. [nucleo- + proteid.] Physiol. Chem. Any of a class of compound proteids found in nearly all cell nuclei, in protoplasm, etc., yielding, with alkalies, proteid and nucleic acid as cleavage products and, by pepsin digestion, true nucleins; — extended by some to include the nucleoalbumins.

nu'cle-us (nū'klē-ŭs), n.; pl. E. NUCLEUSES (-ĕz; -Yz; 151), L. NUCLEI (-ī). [L., a kernel, dim. fr. nux, nucis, nut.] 1. A kernel, as of a nut or seed. Now Rare.

2. A central mass, part, or point about which matter is gathered or concentrated, or to which accretion is made; the central or focal portion; kernel; point of concentration; focus; core.

It must contain within itself a nucleus of truth. I. Taylor.

(3) In lichens and ascomycetous fungi, the center of an apothecium or perithecium. (4) A bulbiet. Rare.

4. Biol. An organ present in the protoplasm of most plant and animal cells, except in certain forms of low organization, and regarded as an essential factor in their constructive metabolism, growth, and reproduction and in the hereditary transmission of characters. It typically consists of a rounded or oval mass of protoplasm inclosed in a delicate membrane (the nuclear membrane) and composed of a hyaline ground substance containing besides one or more nucleoli a network of feebly staining material (linin). In this network are embedded granules (chromatin, which stains deeply with basic dyes, and is the most essential and characteristic substance of the nucleus (see CHROMATIN). During ordinary cell reproduction the nucleus undergoes more or less complex changes, in which the nuclear membrane disappears and the chromatin is distributed to the new cells (see MITOSIS). Many protozoans have two nuclei, of which the smaller (micronucleus) is especially concerned in mitotic reproduction. In many cases multiplication of the nucleus is not followed by division of the cell body, resulting in a multinucleate cell, or cœnocyte. In low forms of cells (as bacteria and blue-green algæ) no nucleus can be detected, but the essential nuclear materials may be distributed in the cell protoplasm.

5. Zoöl. a The earliest formed part of a shell, operculum, or other similar structure. In univalve shells it is at the tip of the spire, in bivalve shells at the umbones. b A visceral mass containing the stomach and other organs in certain Tunicata and mollusks. c The madreporic body of an echinoderm.

See NUT; MUSK.] 1. The seed of a tree (Myristica fragrans), native of the Molucca Islands, but widely cultivated in the East and West Indies and in Brazil; also, the tree itself. The fruit, a nearly spherical yellow drupe of the size of a pear, opens into two nearly equal longitudinal valves, inclosing the nut surrounded by a fleshy arillode, which is mace. The nutmeg is strongly aromatic, and much used as a spice. It yields a yellow fat, called nutmeg butter, and an essential oil, called nutmeg oil. The fleshy part of the fruit is often preserved and eaten in the tropics. 2. Any other species of Myristica or its seed, as the Santa Fé nutmeg (M. otoba). Several yield commercial products greatly inferior to the true nutmeg. b Any of several lauraceous or monimiaceous trees having aromatic fruit. 3. A nutmeg melon. Colloq., U. S.

nutmeg flower. A ranunculaceous herb (Nigella sativa) with small black aromatic seeds, used medicinally and for excluding moths from furs and clothing.

nutmeg liver. Med. A diseased liver or condition of the liver due to heart or lung disease, and characterized by congestion and pigmentation about the central veins of the lobules, giving it an appearance suggestive of a nutmeg.

Syn. — See PABULUM.

nu'tri-men'tal (-mĕn'tăl), a. Nutritious; nourishing; conveying nourishment; nutrient.

nu-tri'tion (nū-trĭsh'ŭn), n. [Cf. F. nutrition. See NUTRITIOUS.] 1. Act or process of nourishing or being nourished; specif.: Physiol. & Biol The sum of the processes by which an animal or plant absorbs, or takes in and utilizes, food substances. Assimilation (which see) is the essential and final part of the process, but is preceded in man and the higher animals by digestion, absorption (accompanied by more or less chemical change) through the mucous membrane of the alimentary canal, and transportation of the absorbed nutritive matter by the blood and lymph to its place of utilization. The food may be converted in part into fats, glycogen, etc., and stored up in the tissues for future use. In plant physiology the term nutrition is more generally restricted to translocative and assimilative processes by which the dissolved food materials are rendered fit for use in growth and development; it does not, therefore, include the purely preliminary processes of photosynthesis and absorption of crude materials, which are, in fact, entirely wanting in the case of saprophytes. Cf. FOOD, I, METABOLISM. 2. Old Pharm. Gradual intermixture of moisture in preparing a medicine. Obs.

3. That which nourishes; nourishment; nutriment; food.

nu-tri'tion-al (-ăl), a. Of or pertaining to nutrition. — nu-tri'tion-al-ly, adv.

O (ō). 1. The fifteenth letter and fourth vowel of the English alphabet. Its form, value, and name come from the Greek O, through the Latin. The letter came into the Greek from the Phœnician, which perhaps derived it ultimately from the Egyptian. See ALPHABET, Illust. O has several sounds in English, the chief of which are its "long," or name, sound, as in bone, its "short" sound, as in nod, and the sounds heard in the words orb, son, do (dōō), and wolf (wo͝olf). With the other vowels it forms several digraphs and diphthongs. See Guide to Pron., §§ 199–210. Etymologically, o is most closely related to a, e, and u ; as in E. bone, AS. bān ; E. stone, AS. stān ; E. broke, AS. brecan to break ; E. bore, AS. beran to bear ; E. dove, AS. dūfe ; E. number, F. nombre.

2. As a symbol, used to denote or indicate : a The fourteenth or (cf. K, 2 a) the fifteenth in a series ; fourteenth (or fifteenth) in order or class ; sometimes, the numeral fourteen (or fifteen) ; as, Section O. b Logic. The particular negative proposition (some A is not B). c Chem. (1) [cap.] Oxygen. (2) [l. c., often ital.] Ortho- ; as, o-xylene. d Medieval Music. A mark for triple time. See MENSURABLE MUSIC.

3. As a medieval Roman numeral, O stands for 11 ; $\overline{O}$, 11,000.

4. As an abbreviation : a In the form O. : Various proper names, as Olive, Oliver, Olivia (sometimes followed by two dots, O..), Oscar, Otto (sometimes with colon, O :), etc. ; Occidental ; October ; Ohio ; Order ; Oregon ; Orient (Freemasonry) ; Oriental. b In the form o. or O. : octarius, Lat., pint (Pharm.) ; off ; old ; only ; optimus, Lat., best ; over or overs (Cricket) ; overcast (Naut.).

O, or o (ō), n. ; pl. O's, Os, or Os (ōz). 1. The letter O, o, or its sound. "Mouthing out his hollow oes and aes." Tennyson.

2. Something shaped like the letter O ; a circle or oval. "This wooden O [Globe Theater]." Shak.

3. [From its shape.] A cipher ; zero. Rare.

O, a. Having the general shape of the (capital) letter O.

O, n. ; pl. O's (ōz). Act of saying O ; hence, an utterance of pain, lamentation, or the like.—O's of Advent, seven anthems, each beginning with an invocation, as "O Adonai," sung in the Roman Catholic and the Anglican churches between December 16 and Christmas Eve.—O's of St. Bridget, or Fifteen O's, Hist., fifteen devotional meditations on the Passion, beginning "O Jesu," etc., that were composed by St. Bridget.

O (ō), interj. [Cf. F. ô, L. o, Gr. ὦ, ὤ. Cf. OH.] An exclamation used in calling or directly addressing a person or personified object ; also, as an emotional or impassioned exclamation expressing pain, grief, surprise, desire, fear, etc. ; —sometimes followed by that, with ellipsis : "O [I wish] that Ishmael might live before thee!" Gen. xvii. 18.

For ever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven. Ps. cxix 89.

O how love I thy law! Ps. cxix. 97.

☞ A distinction between O and oh is insisted on by some, namely, that O should be used only in direct address, or the vocative, and oh only in exclamations without direct appeal or address. In actual usage O is commonly used with the vocative, and precedes the name of the person or thing addressed with no point of punctuation ; as in, "O John!" ; "O dwellers in the desert!" O is often, also, used in mere exclamations, but perhaps less commonly than oh. Oh is, also, sometimes used in direct address, but is separated from the name of that which is addressed by a comma ; as in, "Oh, mother ;" "Oh, Janice."

o' (ō ; ŏ), prep. Formerly o. A shortened form of of or on. Colloq. or Dial. "Turning o' the tide." Shak.

O'. [Ir. ō a descendant.] A prefix to Irish family names, which signifies grandson or descendant of, and is a character of dignity ; as, *O'*Neil, *O'*Carrol.

-o. A suffix appearing in the first element in compound words taken from the Greek where it is the stem vowel of the first element, or stands for another stem vowel, or sometimes is a secondary addition to a stem ending in a consonant ; —as in aristocracy, philosophy, entomology, iconoclast. Now used as the connecting vowel in analogous formations ; as in Franco-German, fibrinogen.

oaf (ōf), n. [Also auf ; of Scand. origin ; cf. Icel. álfr elf, akin to E. elf. See ELF.] Orig., an elf's child ; a changeling left by fairies or goblins ; hence, a deformed or foolish child ; a simpleton ; an idiot.

They have simple, alternate leaves, varying from linear and entire to broadly obovate, the margin variously indented, lobed, or incised. The fruit is a rounded nut (acorn) more or less invested by a scaly involucre (cup). Many of the oaks are fine forest trees with timber of great economic value. Cork is furnished by the cork oak (which see). The cups of many species contain tannin, and are used in tanning, dyeing, etc. The oak of English history and literature is chiefly the British species Q. robur. See QUERCUS. b The wood of these trees. The best oak timber is hard, tough, and durable, with a handsome grain, due to the prominent medullary rays. It is obtained chiefly from the British species, and from the American Q. alba, Q. rubra, and Q. virginiana. Oak is used extensively for furniture, and in building houses and ships.

Leaves and Acorns of Various Oaks. 1 Willow Oak (Q. phellos) ; 2 White Oak (Q. alba) ; 3 Quercitron (Q. velutina) ; 4 Red Oak (Q. rubra) ; 5 Chestnut Oak (Q. prinus) ; 6 Bur Oak (Q. macrocarpa) ; 7 Swamp White Oak (Q. platanoides). All reduced.

2. a Any of various plants suggestive of the oak in foliage or otherwise ; —usually with qualifying adjective or attributive ; as, poison oak, ground oak, etc. b In Australia, specif., any species of Casuarina. See SHE-OAK.

3. A strong door, often made of oak. Hence, to sport one's oak, to close one's outer door, signifying either that one is out or that one does not desire callers. When one is willing to receive callers only a light inner door is closed. Eng. University Slang.

ob'du-rate (ŏb'dū-rāt; also, esp. in poetry, ŏb-dū'rāt), a. [L. obduratus, p. p. of obdurare to harden; ob (see OB-) + durare to harden, durus hard. See DURE.] 1. Hardened in feelings, esp. against moral or mollifying influences unyielding; persistent; hard-hearted; stubbornly wicked.

The very custom of evil makes the heart obdurate against whatsoever instructions to the contrary. Hooker.

Art thou obdurate, flinty, hard as steel? Shak.

2. Hard; harsh; rugged; rough; intractable. "Obdurate consonants." Swift.

Syn. — Hard, firm, unbending, inflexible, unyielding, stubborn, obstinate, unfeeling, hard-hearted, insensible, unsusceptible. — OBDURATE, INDURATED, CALLOUS, INURED, HARDENED agree in the idea of being or growing hard. OBDURATE has almost entirely lost its physical connotation, and implies stubborn resistance to entreaty or softening influences (see OBSTINATE); as, "the obdurate heart of . . . Pharaoh" (Pope); "The Muse is still as obdurate and coy as ever" (Cowper); "windows fast and obdurate" (R. Browning). INDURATED usually retains its physical sense (as, an indurated swelling, indurated clay), but sometimes occurs figuratively; as, "men of palsied imaginations and indurated hearts" (Wordsworth); "her husband's indurated conscience" (H. James). CALLOUS, both lit. and fig., implies a hardening or deadening of the sensibilities as a result of constant pressure or friction, or of repeated experience; as, "Till, his relish grown callous, almost to disease, who peppered the highest was surest to please" (Goldsmith); "I have . . . supped full of horrors till I have become callous" (Byron). INURED implies such toughening from use as lessens susceptibility to pain or inconvenience; as, "no hackneyed writer, inured to abuse, and callous to criticism" (Mad. D'Arblay); "One soon . . . becomes inured to the work" (Kinglake); "inured to daily toil" (Lockhart). HARDENED, in its fig. senses, implies greater insensibility to hardship than inured; morally, it suggests esp. a settled disregard for the claims of duty or sympathy (cf. reprobate, under ABANDONED); as, hardened against cold, a hardened criminal. See OBSTINATE, INFLEXIBLE, PASSIVE.

3. To offer in opposition, as by way of accusation or reproach; to adduce as an objection or adverse reason.

Others object the poverty of the nation. Addison.

ob-ject', v. i. To make opposition in words or argument, or merely to feel averse; — usually followed by to.

ob'ject (ŏb'jĕkt), n. [L. objectus, p. p., neut. objectum, a thing thrown or put before. See OBJECT, v. t.] 1. An objection; also, an obstacle, let, or hindrance; obstruction. Obs.

2. That which is put, or which may be regarded as put, in the way of some of the senses; something visible or tangible; as, he observed an object in the distance; he touched a strange object in the dark.

The sensations which form the elements of all knowledge are received either simultaneously or successively; when several are received simultaneously, as the smell, the taste, the color, the form, etc., of a fruit, their association together constitutes our idea of an object; when received successively, their association makes up the idea of an event. J. Martineau.

"When ten meet look at the sun or moon," said Reid, "they all see the same individual object." But not so, Hamilton replies: "the truth is that each of these persons sees a different object." . . . Hamilton is right in so far as each concrete experience has its own concrete object; Reid in so far as common experience relates all these concrete objects to one phenomenon. It would be a vast convenience, by the way, if philosophical writers would be at some pains to distinguish these very different meanings of "object" that here again emerge. James Ward.

3. Specif.: That the sight of which arouses feelings of pity, amusement, disgust, or the like; a sight; a spectacle; gazingstock. Now Rare or Colloq. Shak.

4. That which is set, or which may be regarded as set, before the mind so as to be apprehended or known; that of which the mind by any of its activities takes cognizance, whether a thing external in space or a conception formed by the mind itself; as, an object of knowledge, wonder, fear, thought, study, etc. In philosophical discussions, object usually stands in antithesis to subject, ego, or self-consciousness, and its meaning may be extended to designate the totality of external phenomena, as constituting the notself. There is, however, no fixity in this object; a toothache may be the object of consciousness one moment, and the next, with attention directed elsewhere, become merged in organic self-consciousness or phenomenally, object is only one term in the subject-object relation, that is, it is never considered apart from some relation to a subject, but in ordinary usage it is often equivalent to thing, or physical entity conceived as totally independent. With the Scholastics, who gave the term its chief meaning, the object is essentially an object of thought, and is distinguished as formal or material, the formal object being an abstraction, or peculiar aspect of a thing, the material object being the thing considered as a complete whole.

Object is a term for that about which the knowing subject is conversant; what the Schoolmen have styled the "materia circa quam." Sir W. Hamilton.

The object of their bitterest hatred. Macaulay.

5. That by which the mind, or any of its activities, is directed; that on which the purposes are fixed as the end of action or effort; that which is sought for; end; aim; motive; final cause.

Object, beside its proper signification, came to be abusively applied to denote motive, end, final cause . . . This innovation was probably borrowed from the French. Sir W. Hamilton.

Let our object be, our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country. D. Webster.

6. Gram. A word, phrase, or clause used substantively in immediate dependence on a verb, as denoting that on or toward which its action is directed; also, a word, etc., used in immediate dependence on a preposition, as denoting that to which it expresses some relation. The object of a verb is distinguished as a direct object when it denotes that which is immediately acted upon, as ball, in, throw me the ball; and an indirect object, when it denotes that which is affected indirectly by it, as me in the example. In Latin the direct object is regularly put in the accusative, and the indirect in the dative case; thus, tibi gratias ago, I give you thanks.

7. [L. objectus an opposing.] Act of throwing itself, or state of being thrown, in the way; interposition. Obs. & R.

8. Representation; appearance; show. Obs. Shak.

Up to the lake, past all the rest, arose
In glorious object. Chapman.

1. Act of objecting; as, to prevent action by objection.

2. An accusation, as of crime. Obs.

3. An opposing, assaulting, etc.; also, an obstruction. Obs.

4. That which is, or may be, presented in opposition; an adverse reason or argument; a reason for objecting or opposing; as, I have no objection to going; unreasonable objections. "Objections against every truth." Tyndale.

Syn. — Exception, difficulty, doubt, scruple.

ob-jec'ti-vate (-tĭ-vāt), v. t.; -VAT'ED (-vāt'ĕd); -VAT'ING (-vāt'ĭng). To objectify. — ob-jec'ti-va'tion (-vā'shŭn), n.

ob-jec'tive (ŏb-jĕk'tĭv), a. [Cf. F. objectif.] 1. Of or pertaining to an object of action or feeling; forming an object of attraction, or a final cause; esp., pertaining to the material object (see OBJECT, 4).

2. Philos. Of or pertaining to an object; contained in, or having the nature or position of, an object; — opposed to subjective. Specif.: a Existing only in relation to mind; pertaining to the thing known considered merely in its relation to the knowing subject, or to the thing willed or desired in its relation to the agent willing or desiring.

Natural phenomena are only natural appearances. They are, therefore, such as we see and perceive them. Their real and objective natures are therefore the same. Berkeley.

b Existing independent of mind; pertaining to a thing or object as it is in itself or as distinguished from consciousness or the subject. See SUBJECTIVE.

In the Middle Ages, subject meant substance, and has this sense in Descartes and Spinoza; sometimes, also, in Reid. Subjective is used by William of Occam to denote that which exists independent of mind; objective, what is formed by the mind. This shows what is meant by realitas objectiva in Descartes. Kant and Fichte have inverted the meanings. Subject, with them, is the mind which knows; object, that which is known; subjective, the varying conditions of the knowing mind; objective, that which is in the constant nature of the thing known. Trendelenburg.

Objective means that which belongs to, or proceeds from, the object known, and not from the subject knowing, and thus denotes what is real, as opposed to what is ideal — what exists in nature, in contrast to what exists merely in the thought of the individual. Sir W. Hamilton.

Objective reference is the substance of the convention by which rational beings communicate with each other and with themselves, and which, though a consequence of the unity of Reality, can be regarded without being directly identified with that unity. B. Bosanquet.

3. Emphasizing or expressing the nature of reality as it is apart from self-consciousness; treating events or phenomena as external rather than as affected by the reflections or feelings of the observer; as, objective art or literature.

4. Gram. Pertaining to or designating the case which follows a transitive verb or a preposition, being that case which denotes the relation of object. Also, the relation itself. See ACCUSATIVE, a., 2. The objective case in English comprises the Anglo-Saxon accusative and dative, but except in certain pronouns it no longer has any distinct case ending. Certain adverbial expressions, esp. of time or place, where a preposition, as at, in, on, etc., may be supplied, are construed as in the objective case.

My troublous dream [on] this night doth make me sad. Shak.
To write of victories [in or for] next year. Hudibras.

5. Perspective. Belonging or relating to the object to be delineated; as, an objective line, plane, or point.

objective line, Perspective, a line drawn on the geometrical plane to be represented. — o. plane, Stereom., the horizontal plane upon which the object which is to be delineated, or whose place is to be determined, is supposed to stand. — o. point, the point or result to which the operations of an army are directed. By extension, the point or purpose to which anything, as a journey or an argument, is directed. — o. spectroscope, a form of astronomical spectroscope, consisting of a dispersing prism placed in front of the objective of a telescope. — o. validity, Philos., a validity independent of the observing mind. — o. whole. See WHOLE.

ob-jec'tive, n. 1. Gram. The objective case, or a word in it.

2. Optics. The lens, or system of lenses, placed at the end of a telescope, microscope, etc., that is nearest the object. Its office is to form the image of the object, viewed by the eyepiece; the object glass. See MICROSCOPE, Illust.

3. An objective point, as the bull's-eye of a target.

4. That which is objective, or external to the mind.

As for the objective, then, which is opposed to our subjectivity and unknowable by us, it cannot be extant in the world of nature or in the world of man. W. T. Harris.

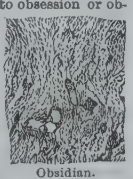
It is usually black or very dark-colored, sometimes reddish or brown (marekanite), and transparent or translucent in thin splinters, and with bright luster. In a thin section it often exhibits a fluidal structure, marked by the arrangement of microlites in the lines of the flow of the molten mass. On account of its fine conchoidal fracture and sharp-edged flakes, it has been largely used by primitive peoples in the manufacture of knives, spear heads, and other implements.



Obsidian.

[See OBSTINATE.] 1. A fixedness in will, opinion, or resolution that cannot be shaken at all, or only with great difficulty ; firm and usually unreasonable adherence to an opinion, purpose, or system ; unyielding disposition ; stubbornness ; pertinacity ; persistency ; contumacy. Shak.

2. Quality or state of being difficult to remedy, relieve, or subdue ; as, the obstinacy of a disease or evil.

3. An obstinate action.

Syn. — Pertinacity, firmness, resoluteness, inflexibility, persistency, stubbornness, perverseness, contumacy.

ob'sti-nate (-nāt), a. [L. obstinatus, p. p. of obstinare to set about a thing with firmness, to persist in ; ob (see OB-) + a word from the root of stare to stand. See STAND ; cf. DESTINE.] 1. Pertinaciously adhering to an opinion, purpose, or course ; persistent ; not yielding to reason, arguments, or other means ; stubborn ; pertinacious ; — usually implying unreasonableness.

No ass so meek, no ass so obstinate. Pope.

2. Not yielding ; not easily subdued or removed ; as, obstinate fever ; obstinate obstructions.

Syn. — Obdurate, unyielding, unbending, inflexible, immovable, stiff, firm, persistent, opinionated ; contumacious, headstrong, heady, perverse, unmanageable, ungovernable. — OBSTINATE, DOGGED, STUBBORN, PERTINACIOUS, INTRACTABLE, REFRACTORY, RECALCITRANT, UNRULY agree in the idea of persistency, often in a bad sense. OBSTINATE implies persistent adherence, esp. against persuasion or attack, to an opinion, purpose, or course ; as, "Browne, fixed and obstinate as a little rock, . . . resisted [their] solicitations" (T. Gray) ; "so yielding doubtful points that he can be firm without seeming obstinate in essential ones" (Lowell) ; "They will not be resolute and firm, but perverse and obsinate" (Burke) ; "Obstinacy in a bad cause is but constancy in a good" (Sir T. Browne) ; "a few hard and obstinate things called facts" (T. L. Peacock). DOGGED adds the implication of downright and tenacious, sometimes sullen, persistence ; as, "a dogged veracity" (Johnson) ; "a dogged perseverance" (Thackeray) ; "I can't always write when I would, though I set myself never so doggedly about it" (Lowell). STUBBORN usually implies a certain (often native) fixedness or doggedness of character ; as, "stubborn as a mule" (Smollett) ; "a stubborn youth, correction-proof" (Fuller) ; "Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke" (T. Gray) ; "I wonder why facts were ever called stubborn things : I am sure they have been found pliable lately" (Coleridge). PERTINACIOUS lacks, as compared with obstinate, the implication of resistance, and as compared with stubborn, the suggestion of inherent quality ; it frequently connotes a persistence that is annoying or irksome ; as, "pertinacious as the tick of an eight-day clock" (Lowell) ; pertinacious as a mosquito, a pertinacious beggar. INTRACTABLE and REFRACTORY imply resistance to direction, intractable more commonly referring to passive resistance, refractory to that which is active ; as, "The phrase would still remain a stiff intractable Latinism" (Landor) ; "The Irish are very intractable ; . . . [there are] great difficulties about who shall be sent over to tame them" (T. Gray) ; an intractable child, temper, soil ; "It becomes my duty to struggle against my refractory feelings" (Mad. D'Arblay) ; a refractory horse, pupil, ore. RECALCITRANT implies obstinate or violent reluctance to obey an order or follow a suggestion ; as, "His father became recalcitrant and cut off the supplies" (Stevenson) ; cf. "forcing the mystery upon recalcitrating minds" (J. H. Newman). UNRULY suggests esp. that which is waywardly ungovernable ; as, "The faults of Ovid are those of a playful and unruly boy" (Landor) ; "Whatever my unruly tongue may say or do, my love for those I love never falters" (J. R. Green). See OBDURATE, INFLEXIBLE, CONTUMACIOUS, WAYWARD, INVETERATE, RESTIVE.

2. To procure ; to prevail upon ; — with a clause or infinitive as object. Now Rare.

3. To prevail in ; to win, as a battle or other contest. Obs.

4. To hold ; keep ; possess ; occupy. Obs.

He who obtains the monarchy of heaven. Milton.

5. To arrive at ; to attain ; gain ; reach. Obs. or Archaic.

Syn. — Get, achieve, secure. — OBTAIN, ATTAIN, ACQUIRE, PROCURE, GAIN, EARN agree in the idea of getting. OBTAIN implies effort directed toward the acquisition of something whose possession is desired ; one ACQUIRES that of which one obtains, often gradually, permanent possession ; to ATTAIN (less frequently applied to material things) is esp. to arrive at the object of one's ambition or the goal of one's endeavor ; as, "Ye desire to have, and cannot obtain" (James iv. 2) ; "He had become a hard reader, and so acquired a great deal of knowledge" (H. C. Robinson) ; "His indolence prevented his turning these good parts toward acquiring the distinction he might have attained" (Scott) ; "A balance and regulation of mind which is not often attained without fruitful effort" (M. Arnold). To PROCURE is to come into possession of something, often temporarily, esp. as a result of search, request, or purchase ; as, "all the tracts my father was at the pains to procure and study in support of his hypothesis" (Sterne). One GAINS esp. what is profitable or advantageous ; to WIN is to gain esp. against opposition or competition ; to EARN is to gain by one's own exertions ; as, "Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire" (Shak.) ; "Woo me and win me" (Tennyson) ; to win one's spurs ; a hard-earned victory. See ACQUIREMENT, EFFECT.

Ocarina.

Oc'cam-ism (ŏk'ăm-ĭz'm), n. The philosophy of William Ockham, an English Franciscan (died about 1349), whose nominalistic doctrine that universals have no real existence, but are only abstract terms or predicables, practically closed the Scholastic controversy on universals. — Oc'cam-ist, n. — Oc'cam-is'tic (ŏk'ăm-ĭs'tĭk), a.

oc-ca'sion (ŏ-kā'zhŭn), n. [L. occasio, fr. occidere, occasum, to fall down; ob (see OB-) + cadere to fall: cf. F. occasion. See CHANCE; cf. OCCIDENT.] 1. A favorable opportunity; a timely chance or juncture; formerly often, specif., excuse or ground for criticism or offense.

Sin, taking occasion by the commandment, deceived me. Rom. vii. 11.

I'll take the occasion which he gives to bring Him to his death. Waller.

☞ The common personification representing occasion as bald behind goes back to Phædrus (Fables, V. 8); "Calvus, comose fronte, nudo occipitio, . . . Occasionem rerum significat brevem." (The bald man whose head has a forelock, but is naked behind, represents the transient timeliness in affairs).

2. A juncture affording ground or reason for something; hence, formerly, an excuse; a pretext.

Whose manner was, all passengers to stay,

3. An occurrence, or a condition of affairs, that brings about some unlooked-for event; that which incidentally brings to pass an event, without being its efficient cause; contributory or incidental cause.

Her beauty was the occasion of the war. Dryden.

4. A matter of discussion; subject; topic. Obs.

5. a A juncture entailing need; an exigency; also, the need so entailed; hence, esp. pl., needs; requirements.

After we have served . . . our own occasions. Jer. Taylor.

b Necessary business; pl., business affairs. Obs. Burke.

6. A happening; occurrence; incident. Now Rare, except with special reference to the time of the happening; as, on the occasion of his reappearance.

The unlooked-for incidents of family history, and its hidden excitements, and its arduous occasions. I. Taylor.

7. A special event or function; specif.: Scot. A communion service; an annual, semiannual, or quarterly sacramental season. Archaic. Oxf. E. D.

Syn. — OCCASION, CAUSE. The CAUSE of an effect is that which actually produces it or brings it about; the OCCASION is that which, either directly or indirectly, provides an opportunity for the causal agencies to act or serves to set them in motion; as, the cause of a war may be a deep-rooted enmity between two peoples, the occasion of it, a relatively unimportant incident; "Poor Ethel . . . feeling guilty almost, as if she had been the cause, as indeed she was the occasion, of Kew's misfortune" (Thackeray). The distinction is sometimes unimportant. See CAUSE, OPPORTUNITY, ORIGIN.

on occasion, as occasion may arise; at need or convenience; occasionally. "That we might have intelligence from him on occasion." De Foe.

oc-ca'sion (ŏ-kā'zhŭn), v. t.; -SIONED (-zhŭnd); -SION-ING. [Cf. F. occasionner.] 1. To give (one) a prompting opportunity or ground; also, to prompt or induce in this way habitually; hence, to habituate. Obs. Latimer.

2. Of or pert. to an occasion or occasions; acting or occurring now and then; made or happening as opportunity requires or admits; casual; incidental; as, occasional remarks.

The . . . occasional writing of the present times. Bagehot.

3. Suitable or designed for, or acting on, a special occasion or particular occasions; as, an occasional chair; occasional verse; an occasional speaker.

4. Acting as the occasion or contributory cause; — sometimes with of. Rare.

occasional cause. Metaph. a According to the theory of occasionalism, a change in mind accompanied by, but not efficiently related to, a change in matter, or vice versa, the concomitance being attributed by the early occasionalists to the intervention of God. b Some circumstance preceding an effect which, without being the real cause, becomes the occasion of the action of the efficient cause; thus, the act of touching gunpowder with fire is the occasional, but not the efficient, cause of an explosion. — o. conformity, Eng. Hist., partial religious conformity, manifested by an occasional reception of the Communion according to the rites of the Church of England. It was practiced by dissenters as a qualification for political office, and a bill against the practice, introduced in 1703, was passed in 1711. — o. contraband. See CONTRABAND OF WAR.

oc-ca'sion-al-ism (-ĭz'm), n. Metaph. The doctrine of occasional causes. Occasionalism is the theory adduced by the Cartesians, Geulincx and Malebranche, that the correspondence of bodily and mental action, or the apparent reciprocal action of the soul and the body, is due to the intervention of God, producing on the occasion of a change in one a like change in the other, it being conceived that mind and matter are inherently incapable of affecting each other. The term is sometimes applied also to the modern form of the theory of psychophysical parallelism.

oc-cip'i-tal (ŏk-sĭp'ĭ-tăl), a. [Cf. F. occipital.] Anat. Of or pertaining to the occiput or the occipital bone.

occipital angle, Craniom., the angle formed by the plane of the foramen magnum and a line from the opisthion to the inferior border of the orbit (in Daubenton's usage), or to the nasion (in Broca's). — o. artery, Anat., a branch of the external carotid supplying the muscles, etc., of the back of the neck and head. — o. bone, the compound bone which forms the posterior part of the skull and surrounds the foramen magnum, bearing the condyle or condyles for articulation with the atlas. In the higher vertebrates it is usually composed of four more or less completely united elements, a basioccipital below, a supraoccipital above, and an exoccipital on each side, but it may include also sphenoid, temporal, or parietal elements. In man it is much curved and of trapezoidal outline, ending in front of the foramen magnum in the basilar process, and bearing on its outer surface behind the foramen magnum two curved transverse ridges (the superior and inferior curved lines) besides a median crest and protuberance. — o. condyle, Anat. & Zoöl., an articular surface on the occipital bone by which the skull articulates with the atlas. Fishes, reptiles, and birds have but one occipital condyle, which is placed below the foramen magnum. In mammals and most amphibians there are two, one on each side of the foramen magnum. — o. crest. Anat. & Zoöl. a Either of the two ridges connecting the occipital protuberances and foramen magnum. b A transverse ridge at the upper posterior border of the skull of many animals, between the occipital and parietal segments. c In birds, a crest of feathers on the back of the head. — o. foramen. a Anat. The foramen magnum. b Zoöl. The opening at the back of an insect's head through which the alimentary canal and other organs pass to the thorax. — o. lobe, Anat., the posterior lobe of the cerebral hemisphere, indistinctly separated from the parietal lobe in front and the temporal lobe below. It has the form of a three-sided pyramid. Its external surface is divided by the superior and middle occipital sulci into the superior, middle, and inferior occipital convolutions. — o. plane, Craniom., the plane of the foramen magnum. — o. plate, Zoöl., a scute on the back of the head of certain reptiles. — o. point, Craniom., the point on the occiput farthest removed from the glabella. — o. protuberance, Anat., either of two prominences on the occipital bone. The external (called in craniometry the inion) is on the outer surface midway between the upper border and the foramen magnum. It gives attachment to the ligamentum nuchæ. The internal is similarly situated on the inner surface. — o. segment. See CRANIAL SEGMENT. — o. sinus, Anat., a venous sinus lodged in a groove on the internal occipital crest. It is occasionally double. — o. triangle. Anat. See triangles of the neck, under TRIANGLE.

oc-cip'i-tal, n. a The occipital bone. b An occipital plate.

oc-cip'i-to- (ŏk-sĭp'ĭ-tō-). [See OCCIPUT.] A combining form denoting relation to, or situation near, the occiput.

oc-cip'i-to-fron-ta'lis (-frŏn-tā'lĭs), n. [NL.] Anat. A fibrous layer covering each side of the vertex of the skull from the eyebrow to the occiput. Its anterior and posterior portions are muscular and constitute the frontalis and occipitalis muscles, respectively.

oc'ci-put (ŏk'sĭ-pŭt), n.; L. pl. OCCIPITA (ŏk-sĭp'ĭ-tă). [L.; ob (see OB-) + caput head. See CHIEF.] 1. Anat. The back part of the head or skull; the region of the occipital bone.

2. Zoöl. The back part of the head of insects.

oc-clude' (ŏ-klōōd'; 243), v. t.; -CLUD'ED (-klōōd'ĕd) : -CLUD'ING (-klōōd'ĭng). [L. occludere, occlusum; ob (see OB-) + claudere to shut.] 1. To shut up; to close. Sir T. Browne. 2. To shut in or out by or as by closing a passage; as, to occlude light.

3. Chem. To take in and retain; to absorb; — said esp. with respect to the absorbing of gases by certain substances which do not thereby lose their characteristic properties; as, charcoal, iron, platinum, and palladium occlude large volumes of hydrogen, palladium nearly a thousand times its own volume.

oc-clud'ent (ŏ-klōōd'ĕnt), a. [L. occludens, p. pr. of occludere.] Serving to occlude. — n. That which occludes.

2. Specif.: a The transient approximation of the edges of a natural opening, as of the eyelids. b Med. Imperforation. c Chem. Absorption, esp. of gases (see OCCLUDE, 3). d Phon. A sudden complete closure of some part of the oral passage, with consequent implosion of the breath, as in forming a stopped consonant or explosive.

oc-clu'sive (-sĭv), a. 1. Tending to occlude, or causing occlusion; occludent. 2. Phon. Characterized by occlusion.

oc-clu'sive, n. An occlusive sound or its symbol; a stop, esp. one formed without explosion. See STOP, n., 9.

oc-cult' (ŏ-kŭlt'), a. [L. occultus, p. p. of occulere to cover up, hide; ob (see OB-) + a root prob. akin to celare to conceal : cf. F. occulte. Cf. CONCEAL.] Hidden from the eye or the understanding; secret; concealed; hence, mysterious, supernormal, or supernatural.

It is of an occult kind, and is so insensible in its advances as to escape observation. I. Taylor.

Syn. — See RECONDITE.

occult line, Geom., a line drawn in the construction of a figure, but not to appear in the finished plan; a dotted line. — o. qualities, those qualities whose effects only are observed, but the nature and relations of whose productive agencies are undetermined. — o. sciences, sciences that relate to the supposed action or influence of occult qualities, or supernatural powers, as alchemy, magic, necromancy, and astrology. — o. spavin, Veter., spavin in which there is pronounced lameness without apparent enlargement on the hock joint, the inflammation being confined to the center of the bones or to their articular surfaces.

oc-cult', v. t.; OC-CULT'ED; OC-CULT'ING. [L. occultare to conceal.] To hide from sight; to conceal; specif., Astron., to conceal, or extinguish the light of, by intervention; to eclipse; — said of one heavenly body, as the moon, with respect to another, as a planet or star.

oc-cult', v. i. To become concealed, as a disappearing and reappearing light at a lighthouse.

oc'cul-ta'tion (ŏk'ŭl-tā'shŭn), n. [L. occultatio a hiding, fr. occultare, v. intens. of occulere. See OCCULT.] 1. Astron. Extinction of the light of a heavenly body by intervention of some other of the heavenly bodies; — applied esp. to eclipses of stars and planets by the moon, and to eclipses of planetary satellites by their primaries.

2. Act of making, or state of being, occult; esp., state of being hidden from view or lost to notice.

The reappearance of such an author after those long periods of occultation. Jeffrey.

oc-cult'ing (ŏ-kŭl'tĭng), p. pr. & vb. n. of OCCULT. Specif.: p. a. Optics & Astron. Designating, or pert. to, any of various devices for occulting, or cutting off from view, a light or a light-giving body; as, an occulting bar, shutter, screen.

oc-cult'ism (-ĭz'm), n. Occult theory or practice; belief in hidden or mysterious powers and the possibility of subjecting them to human control.

oc-cult'ist, n. An adherent of occultism; also, one believed to be proficient in occult practices.

oc'cu-pan-cy (ŏk'ū-păn-sĭ), n. [See OCCUPANT.] Act of taking or holding possession; occupation; specif., Law, act of taking possession of a thing having no owner, as waifs, derelicts, wild beasts, etc., thus acquiring title thereto.

oc'cu-pant (-pănt), n. [L. occupans, p. pr.: cf. F. occupant. See OCCUPY.] 1. One who occupies, or takes possession; one who has the actual use or possession, or is in possession, of a thing; one in occupation.

2. Specif.: Law. One who takes the first possession of a thing that has no owner, acquiring a title by occupation.

3. A prostitute. Obs. Marston.

oc'cu-pa'tion (-pā'shŭn), n. [F., fr. L. occupatio.] 1. Act or process of occupying, or taking possession; actual possession and control; state of being occupied; a holding or keeping; occupancy; tenure; use; as, the occupation of lands by a tenant; title by occupation (see OCCUPANCY).

2. That which occupies, or engages, the time and attention; the principal business of one's life; vocation; employment; calling; trade.

Absence of occupation is not rest. Cowper.

3. Those engaged in a calling or trade, collectively. Obs.

4. Act of employing; use. Obs.

5. Land held by a tenant; a holding. Eng.

Syn. — Business, profession, trade. — OCCUPATION, EMPLOYMENT, PURSUIT, CALLING, VOCATION. One's OCCUPATION is that to which one's time is devoted, or in which one is regularly or habitually engaged; EMPLOYMENT, which is often interchangeable with occupation, may also suggest what one does in another's service; as, "Othello's occupation's gone" (Shak.); "Let us to our fresh employments rise" (Thomson); "Whoever the king favors, the cardinal instantly will find employment" (Shak.). A PURSUIT is an occupation directed, esp. voluntarily, to a given end; as, "a plain English merchant . . . strongly attached to literary pursuits" (De Quincey). CALLING is now generally used in the sense of one's regular business or profession; VOCATION (see VOCATION), the more elevated term, is often exactly equivalent to calling; but it sometimes retains the suggestion of an employment to which one is destined by nature, or called, as it were, by some higher power; as, men who have risen from the humblest callings; to follow one's vocation; "I suppose it is as hard for him [Tennyson] to relinquish his vocation as other men find it to be in other callings to which they have been devoted" (E. Fitz Gerald). See TRADE, OFFICE, WORK, WORKMAN.

occupation neurosis. Med. A nervous affection associated with certain occupations, and often caused by constant repetition of some movement, as in writer's cramp.

oc'cu-pa-tive (ŏk'ū-pā-tĭv), a. Pertaining to or involving occupation or the right of occupation.

oc'cu-pi'er (ŏk'ū-pī'ẽr), n. 1. One who occupies.

2. Esp., one in occupation of property as owner or tenant; often, in British usage, a tenant occupying property, as distinguished from an owner, occupiers of property of certain values or classes being liable to certain rates, eligible to the voting franchise (called occupation franchise), etc.

3. One who follows an employment; hence, a tradesman. Obs. "Merchants and occupiers." Holland.

oc'cu-py (-pī), v. t.; OC'CU-PIED (-pīd); OC'CU-PY'ING (-pī'-ĭng). [ME. occupien, F. occuper, fr. L. occupare; ob (see OB-) + a word akin to capere to take. See CAPACIOUS.] 1. To take or enter upon possession of; to seize. Obs., except of a place by settling in it, conquering it, or the like.

2. To hold possession of; to hold or keep for use; to possess; to dwell or live in; to tenant.

Woe occupieth the fine [end] of our gladness. Chaucer.

The better apartments were already occupied. Irving.

3. To take up, or have place in, the extent, room, space, or time of; to fill; to take or use up; as, the camp occupies five acres of ground; I will not occupy more of your time.

4. To possess or use the time or capacity of; to engage the service of; to employ; to busy.

An archbishop may have cause to occupy more chaplains than six. Eng. Statute (Hen. VIII.).

They occupied themselves about the Sabbath. 2 Macc. viii. 27.

5. In Obs. senses: a To use; expend; make use of.

All the gold that was occupied for the work. Ex. xxxviii. 24.

b To do business in; practice; carry on; follow. c To use (capital) in commerce; to invest; trade or do business with. Ezek. xxvii. 9. d To have sexual intercourse with.

oc'cu-py, v. i. 1. To take possession. Rare.

2. To hold possession; to be an occupant or tenant; reside. Obs. "Occupy till I come." Luke xix. 12.

3. To make use; — with of. Obs.

4. To employ or busy one's self; to do business; to work; practice; also, to trade or traffic. Obs.

5. To have sexual intercourse; to cohabit. Obs.

oc-cur' (ŏ-kûr'), v. i.; -CURRED' (-kûrd'); -CUR'RING (-kŭr'-ĭng). [L. occurrere, occursum; ob (see OB-) + currere to run. See COURSE.] 1. To meet; clash, as two bodies. Obs.

2. To meet in opposition (to); to make reply. Obs.

I must occur to one specious objection. Bentley.

3. To meet one's eye; to be found or met with; to present itself; to appear; to happen; to take place; as, if opportunity occurs; do not let it occur again.

Anous stolidus [the noddy tern] chiefly frequents tropical and subtropical regions, and has occurred once in Ireland. Cambridge Nat. Hist.

4. To meet or come to the mind; to suggest itself; to be presented to the imagination or memory.

There doth not occur to me any use of this experiment for profit. Bacon.

5. Eccl. To fall on the same day; — said of festivals. Cf. CONCUR, v. i., 2.

Syn. — OCCUR, HAPPEN are often used without distinction. But OCCUR is the more formal word of the two, and applies esp. to that which is thought of as definitely taking place as an event; HAPPEN is the more general term for that which in any way comes to pass; as, when did it happen? cf. when did it occur? His death occurred at midnight; I don't know what happened (cf. what occurred) after I left. See HAPPEN.

oc-cur'rence (ŏ-kŭr'ĕns), n. [Cf. F. occurrence. See OCCUR.]

1. A casual meeting. Obs.

2. A coming or happening; as, the occurrence of a fire.

Voyages detain the mind by the perpetual occurrence and expectation of something new. I. Watts.

3. Any incident or event, esp. one that happens without being designed or expected; as, an unusual occurrence, or the ordinary occurrences of life.

4. Eccl. The occurring of two festivals.

Syn. — See EVENT.

oc-cur'rent (-ĕnt), a. [L. occurrens, -entis, p. pr. of occurrere: cf. F. occurrent. See OCCUR.] Occurring or happening; hence, incidental; accidental. Now Rare.

o'cean (ō'shăn), n. [F. océan, L. oceanus, Gr. ὠκεανός ocean, in Homer, the great river supposed to encompass the earth.] 1. The whole body of salt water which covers nearly three fourths of the surface of the globe; — called also the sea, or great sea. The average depth of the ocean is estimated to be about 13,000 feet; the greatest reported depth is 32,112 feet, northeast of Mindanao. The ocean bottom is in general a level or gently undulating plain, covered with a fine red or gray clay, or, in certain regions, with ooze of organic origin. The water, whose composition is fairly constant, contains on the average 3½ per cent of dissolved salts; of this solid portion, common salt forms about 78 per cent, magnesium salts 15–16 per cent, calcium salts 4 per cent, with smaller amounts of various other substances. The density of ocean water is about 1.026.

2. One of the large bodies of water into which the great ocean is regarded as divided, as the Atlantic, Pacific, Indian, Arctic, and Antarctic Oceans.

Scandinavians, the heritable land held by the various odalmen constituting a family or kindred of freeborn tribesmen; also, the ownership of such land. The odal was subject only to certain rights of the family or kindred in restricting the freedom of transfer or sale and giving certain rights of redemption in case of change of ownership by inheritance, etc., and perhaps to other rights of the kindred or the tribe. Like alod (which see), the term odal has come to be used as the name of land held in fee simple, or the ownership of land so held. Survivals of the early odal estates and tenure exist in Orkney and Shetland, where it is usually called by the variant form udal.

o'dal, a. Law. Noting, or pert. to, odal land or ownership.

o'dal-born', a. Teut. Law. Born with rights in the odal.

o'da-lisque, o'da-lisk (ō'dă-lĭsk). n. [F. odalisque, fr. Turk. ōdahlïq chambermaid, fr. ōdah chamber.] A female slave or concubine in a harem, esp. of the Turkish sultan.

ode (ōd), n. [F., fr. L. ode, oda, Gr. ᾠδή a song, especially a lyric song, contr. fr. ἀοιδή, fr. ἀείδειν to sing; cf. Skr. vad to speak, sing. Cf. COMEDY, MELODY, MONODY.] 1. A short poem suited to be set to music or sung, and hence typically characterized by varying length of time and complexity of stanza forms; esp., such a poem expressive of sustained noble sentiment with appropriate dignity of style. In metrical form odes generally follow: (1) the regular Greek ode, as those of Pindar, divided into a strophe and antistrophe of identical form — though differing in different odes — and an epode of contrasting form; or (2) an irregular structure, as the so-called Pindaric odes of Cowley, or Wordsworth's "Ode on Intimations of Immortality;" or (3) the choral ode of the classic Greek drama. Another class has uniform lyric stanzas, as many of the so-called "odes" (carmina) of Horace.

The Greek odes were accompanied by music and dancing, the singers moving to one side during the strophe, retracing their steps during the antistrophe, . . . and standing still during the epode. Bronson.

2. East. Ch. A song or hymn, usually having three, four, or five troparia, or stanzas, as in the canon of the order; also, a Scripture canticle.

-ode (-ōd). [Gr. -ώδης, -ῶδες, fr. -ο- + -ειδής like; εἶδος form.] A suffix denoting like, thing that is like; as phyllode, cladode, geode, sarcode.

-ode. A suffix from Greek ὁδός, way, path, as in cathode, anode, electrode.

O'dels-thing (ō'dĕls-tĭng), n. [Norw. ódel odal + ting parliament.] The lower house of the Norwegian Storthing. See LEGISLATURE.

o-de'um (ō-dē'ŭm), n.; pl. ODEA (-ă). [L., fr. Gr. ᾠδεῖον, fr. ᾠδή. See ODE.] A kind of theater in ancient Greece and afterward in Rome, smaller than the dramatic theater and roofed over, in which poets and musicians submitted their works to the approval of the public, and contended for prizes; hence, in modern usage, a hall, gallery, etc., for musical or dramatic performances.

od'ic (ŏd'ĭk), a. Pertaining to, or forming, an ode.

od'ic (ŏd'ĭk; ōd'ĭk), a. Of or pertaining to od. See OD. Obsoles. — od'i-cal-ly (-ĭ-kăl-ĭ), adv.

O'din (ō'dĭn), n. [Of Scand. orig.; cf. Icel. Óðinn, akin to AS. Wōden. See WODEN.] Norse Myth. The supreme deity of the later Norse pantheon, called Woden by the Germanic Teutons. He was god of wisdom, poetry, and war, and in Valhalla presided over the banquets of those slain in battle. He was also god of the dead, and was believed to lead the Furious Host (see WILD HUNT). He was also a god of agriculture, particularly of sowing, and for this purpose Wednesday, the day devoted to him, was considered lucky. He was represented as a man with hat and staff, and one-eyed, since he had given an eye to Mimir (which see). His worship seems to have originated in Germany, where in early times human sacrifices were offered to him. Later he displaced Thor as the chief god of the Norse. His wife was Frigg. He was father of Balder and other gods. See ÆSIR, FENRIR, VALKYRIE, YMIR.

He rendered himself odious to the Parliament. Clarendon.

o'di-um (ō'dĭ-ŭm), n. [L., fr. odi I hate; cf. Gr. ὀδύσσεσθαι, AS. atol dire, horrid. Cf. ANNOY, NOISOME.] 1. Hatred; now, usually, state or fact of being hated; as, that brought him into odium, or, brought odium upon him.

2. The stigma attaching to what is hateful; opprobrium.

She threw the odium of the fact on me. Dryden.

3. That which is hated. Obs.

Syn. — Abhorrence, detestation, antipathy; reproach. — ODIUM, HATRED agree in the idea of strong aversion. But HATRED may denote either the enmity which one feels for another or that which one experiences or incurs; ODIUM applies only to the latter, and denotes esp. the opprobrium attaching to an object of general aversion; as, "a . . . secret hatred and aversion toward society" (Bacon); "They seek for hatred at my hands" (Shak.); "Whatever odium or loss her maneuvers incurred she flung upon her counselors" (J. R. Green). See HATE, HATEFUL, OPPROBRIOUS.

The adults are usually strikingly colored ; they frequent flowers. The larvæ feed on decaying wood. — œ'de-me'rid (-mē'rĭd), a. & n.

Œd'i-pus (ĕd'ĭ-pŭs ; ē'dĭ- ; the second is the preferred pronunciation in British usage), n. [L., fr. Gr. Οἰδίπους.] Gr. Myth. Son of Laius and Jocasta, king and queen of Thebes. At Œdipus's birth an oracle foretold that Laius would lose his life at his son's hand. The child was given to a herdsman to expose, who instead committed him to a comrade, and eventually Œdipus was adopted by Polybus, king of Corinth. When grown, an oracle having warned him that he would kill his father and marry his mother, Œdipus left home. On the journey he met Laius and, unaware of his relationship, slew him in an altercation. Later he solved the riddle of the Sphinx, thereby freeing Thebes from distress, and was made king of the city. He married Jocasta, by whom he became father of Eteocles, Polynices, Antigone, and Ismene. Eventually, his parentage being discovered, Jocasta hanged herself and Œdipus tore out his eyes. His sons and his uncle Creon became masters of the city and banished him. Accompanied only by Antigone, he made his way to Colonos in Attica, where Ismene joined them and where he died after delivering a curse upon his sons for their unnatural strife. See ANTIGONE, CREON, ETEOCLES. The legend is the theme of Sophocles's tragedies "Œdipus Tyrannus" and "Œdipus Coloneus."

Œ'do-go'ni-um (ē'dō-gō'nĭ-ŭm), n. [NL. ; Gr. οἰδεῖν to swell + γόνος seed.] Bot. A genus of filamentous algæ forming green masses attached to various objects in streams and ponds. They develop antheridia and oögonia, and also large asexual swarm spores.

ăd, ē-lĭ'yădˌ ; ā-lĭ'yădˌ, n. [F., fr. œil eye. Cf. BYELET.] A glance of the eye; an amorous look; an ogle. Shak.

œ-nan'thate (ē-năn'thāt), n. Chem. A salt or ester of œnanthic acid.

Œ-nan'the (-thē), n. [L., fr. Gr. οἰνάνθη. See ŒNANTHIC.] Bot. A rather large genus of Old World apiaceous herbs, the water dropworts, distinguished by the compound umbel of white flowers without carpophores. The roots of many species, as Œ. crocata, are extremely poisonous, though some East Indian species have edible tubers.

œ-nan'thic (-thĭk), a. [Gr. οἰνάνθη the first shoot of the vine, the vine blossom, the vine; οἰνη the vine + ἄνθη bloom, ἄνθος flower.] Chem. a Designating, or pertaining to, an acid ($C_{14}H_{28}O_2$, according to the old nomenclature) believed by Liebig and Pelouze to exist in wine in the form of its ethyl ester, a liquid of ethereal winous odor called œnanthic ether. The latter substance has since been affirmed to be pelargonic ester, or a mixture chiefly of caprylic and capric esters. It is obtained from wine by distillation or artificially from oil of rue, and is used in flavoring artificial wines and liquors. b = ŒNANTHYLIC.

œ-nan'thol (-thōl; -thŏl), n. [œnanthylic + 2d -ol.] Chem. An oily substance of pungent odor, $C_6H_{13}CHO$, the aldehyde of œnanthylic acid, easily got by distilling castor oil.

œ-nan'thyl (-thĭl), n. [œnanthic + -yl.] Org. Chem. a A univalent radical, $C_6H_{13}CO$, the radical of œnanthylic acid. Cf. BENZOYL. b = HEPTYL.

œ-nan'thyl-ate (-thĭ-lāt), n. Chem. A salt or ester of œnanthylic acid.

œ'nan-thyl'ic (ē'năn-thĭl'ĭk), a. Chem. Designating, or pertaining to, an acid, $C_6H_{13}CO_2H$ (normal heptoic acid), nearly corresponding in composition to the œnanthic acid of Liebig and Pelouze. It is a colorless liquid boiling at 224° C., and is best obtained by oxidizing œnanthol.

œ'nan-thyl'i-dene (-ĭ-dēn), n. Chem. A colorless liquid hydrocarbon, $C_6H_{11}C{:}CH$, having a garlic odor. It is a heptine of normal structure, belonging to the acetylene series.

Œ'no-car'pus (ē'nō-kär'pŭs), n. [NL.; œno- + Gr. καρπός fruit.] Bot. A small genus of South American pinnate-leaved palms with a slender bractless spadix subtended by a woody spathe. The fruit is black and often edible. Most species yield oil. Œ. bacaba is the bacaba palm.

œ-noch'o-ë (ē-nŏk'ō-ē), n.; L. pl. -CHOÆ (-ē). [NL., fr. Gr. οἰνοχόη; οἶνος wine + χοή a pouring.] Class. Archæol. A wine pitcher or jug, usually with a trefoil-shaped mouth, found in nearly all periods of Greek art.

œ'no-cyte (ē'nō-sīt), n. [œno- + -cyte.] Zoöl. One of the peculiar large cells that form metameric clusters connected with the tracheæ and fat body of insects.

œ-no'lic (ē-nō'lĭk; -nŏl'ĭk), a. [œno- + (prob.) 1st -ol.] Org. Chem. Designating, or pertaining to, any of a series of weak tanninlike acids forming the coloring matter of wine, the baccate fruit of various shrubs, etc., orig. designated by such names as œnocyanin and œnolin.

œ-nol'o-gy (ē-nŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [œno- + -logy.] Knowledge or study of wines. — œ'no-log'i-cal (ē'nō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. — œ-nol'o-gist (ē-nŏl'ō-jĭst), n.

œ'no-man'cy (ē'nō-măn'sĭ), n. [œno- + -mancy.] Divination by the color or other peculiarities of wine.

œ'no-mel (ē'nō-mĕl; ĕn'ō-), n. [L. œnomeli, Gr. οἰνόμελι; οἶνος wine + μέλι honey.] Gr. Antiq. A beverage consisting of wine and honey. Hence, fig., of language or thought.

œs'trus (ēs'trŭs; ēs'-), n. [L., a gadfly; also, frenzy, fr. Gr. οἶστρος gadfly; hence, sting, fury, insane desire, frenzy.] 1. [cap.] Zoöl. Same as ŒSTRIDÆ. 2. A vehement desire or impulse; stimulus; frenzy; rage; esp., Physiol., the sexual heat of animals; rut.

of (ŏv; unaccented ŭv), prep. [AS. of, from, off; akin to D. & OS. af, G. ab off, OHG. aba from, away, Icel., Dan., Sw., & Goth. af, L. ab, Gr. ἀπό, Skr. apa. Cf. OFF, A-, AB-, AFTER.] In the most general sense: proceeding from; belonging to; relating to; connected with; concerning. Of primarily denotes from, away from, a sense retained in its independently developed variant, off; hence it is used in expressions involving the idea of moving or resulting from, as those of separation, derivation, source, agent, means, material, etc. The primary sense, however, has disappeared in most of its derived applications, which have been much affected by its early use in translating the Latin ab, dē, ex, and as corresponding to the French de. The latter influence largely brought about its use in many phrase constructions, esp. with verbs and adjectives, notably as replacing the genitive (which see). But most of its uses may be traced to the primary sense, implying something that in fact or thought proceeds from a thing, or has, or has had, a connection with it. Hence of is used as: 1. Indicating the place or thing from which anything moves, comes, goes, or is directed or impelled; from; away from; out of. Obs., or partly replaced by off. See OFF. "With the least drawing blood of another." Purchas.

2. Indicating that from which there has been transition, actual or supposed, as an anterior time or state; also, that from which position or reckoning is defined; from. Obs. or Archaic, except in certain phrases, such as of old (cf. def. 17; and see under OLD, n.), north of, within an hour of, upwards of, etc.

How long is it ago since this came unto him? And he said, Of a child. Mark ix. 21

Of fleshly, to be again made spiritual. Manning.

Tom . . . finds himself within a foot or two of him. T. Hughes

3. Indicating that from which a person or thing is delivered, or of which a person or thing is deprived, or the like; from; — partly replaced by from, and now used only with certain verbs or adjectives; as, to cure, ease, empty, rid, deprive, or strip of; quit, rid, bare, destitute, empty of.

The man recovered of the bite. Goldsmith.

Heaven make thee free of it! Shak.

4. Indicating origin, source, descent, or the like; from; as, he was born of a race of kings; he is of noble blood.

I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you. 1 Cor. xi. 23.

5. Indicating that by which a person or thing is actuated or impelled, as the cause, motive, or reason, etc.; from; out of; as a result or consequence of; — now used chiefly after an intransitive verb, as die, savor, etc.; or an adjective, as sick, ashamed, glad, proud, etc.; as, they went of their own will; no body can move of itself; he did it of necessity. Formerly also in such constructions as, to thank him of [for] his kindness; shame of his conduct.

For it was of the Lord to harden their hearts. Josh. xi. 20.

6. Indicating the agent, or person by whom or thing by which anything is done or made: (1) often, now archaically, after such past participles as loved, ordained, abandoned, forgotten; as, "He is despised and rejected of men" (Is. liii. 3); (2) after an adjective or adjective phrase characterizing the act or conduct; as, it was kind of him to offer it; (3) after a noun, indicating the maker or author, or, when the noun is one of action, the doer, often with the force of the subjective genitive; as, the Epistles of Paul; the plays of Shakespeare; the love of God, i. e., God's love for us. Cf. def. 11.

It was a mad . . . trick of him to steal from the state. Shak.

7. Indicating means or instrument; by means of; with; on. Obs. or Archaic.

Pave it all of silver and of gold. Chaucer

They which minister about holy [R. V. sacred] things live [R. V. eat] of the things of the temple. 1 Cor. ix. 13.

8. Indicating the material, substance, parts, elements of which anything is composed or made, or of which it consists; as, a throne of gold; a cup of water; an army of ten thousand men; a distance of five miles; a genus of plants or animals; Her., barry of six, i. e., having six bars.

9. Indicating a particular example of a class denoted by the limited noun, or a relation of apposition; as, the continent of America; the city of Rome; — now Obs. or Archaic in the sense of, "in the person of."

You have a nurse of me. Shak.

10. Indicating that to which reference is made, or the subject of thought, action, etc.; about; concerning; relating to; with reference to; as regards; as to; as, to boast of one's achievements; to tell, judge, or doubt of a matter; what has become of him? Formerly also after do; as in, what was done of them; and after nouns; as in, a treatise of government.

Knew you of this fair work? Shak.

11. Indicating the object after a noun denoting an action or agent; — corresponding to the objective genitive; as, the commission of a crime; the feeding of an army; a drinker of wine; the love of God, i. e., our love for God. Cf. def. 6. See -ING, 2.

12. In many verbal and adjective constructions, denoting a relationship that is hardly more than a grammatical construction, or one that approaches, but is not clearly identifiable with, some one of the foregoing applications; — representing an Anglo-Saxon or Latin genitive dependent on a verb or adjective; as, he smelled of the flower; I accuse you of treason; you have the advantage of me.

13. Indicating that with respect to which an attribute is ascribed, or of which a fact is affirmed; in respect of; in the matter of; in; — now to a considerable extent replaced by in; as, slow of speech; forty years of age.

False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand. Shak.

14. Indicating an attribute or distinctive mark which characterizes a person or thing; — corresponding to the descriptive genitive, denoting a quality, quantity, age, price, distinguishing or specifying fact or thing, or the like, and sometimes passing into or connected with other senses; as, a man of courage; she was all of a tremble; a ship of a hundred tons; a boy of ten years; a time of drought; a sword of their manufacture; a book of his selection.

15. Indicating the aggregate or whole of which the limited word or words denote a part, or of which a part is referred to, thought of, affected, etc.; belonging to a number or quantity mentioned; out of; from amongst; as, most of the company; "the poor of his people" (Is. xiv. 32); the flower of the family; the King of kings.

It is a duty to communicate of those blessings we have received. Franklin.

☞ Sometimes the partitive word may include the whole, as in, all of them; "a hundred upon poor four of us" (Shak.); rarely, by a curious idiom, the partitive word is a superlative or a noun or pronoun denoting an example of a whole which is logically exclusive of the part, either from the nature of the case; as in, "the fairest of her daughters Eve" (Milton); or by the use of other, else, or the like, as a qualifier; as in, "Of all men else I have avoided thee" (Shak.).

16. Indicating the relationship of possession, otherwise expressed by the possessive case; belonging or pertaining to, or connected with (a place, time, person, or thing); as, the right of the possessor; the gate of heaven; the mistletoe of Europe; the people of the Middle Ages; in the days of Herod; the dean of the college; the genius of the language; the cube of a number. See POSSESSIVE, a.

17. Indicating a point or space of time; — during; in the course of; on; as, of a day. Obs. or Archaic & Colloq., except in certain phrases; as, of late; of old, etc. Cf. def. 2.

My custom always of the afternoon. Shak.

18. In various senses, mostly Obs., now represented by other prepositions; as: a On. "A plague of all cowards." "He came of an errand." Shak. Obs. or Colloq. b In. Obs. or R. c At. Obs. d To. Obs. e By. Obs. f With; as, what is the matter of you? Obs. or Colloq. of it, by way of, or out of, it; — where it may denote the fact, matter, or thing referred to; thus, to have a hard life of it.

of-. [AS. See OF, prep., OFF.] An obsolete prefix originally used in Anglo-Saxon with verbs in the sense of away, off, but becoming modified so as frequently to add the sense of destroying, injuring, or overcoming, to that of the verb. In Middle English its meaning became obscured or lost, and in later combinations was gradually superseded by off-. See OFF-.

off (ŏf; 205), adv. [ME. of, orig. the same word as E. of, prep., AS. of, adv. & prep. See OF.] In a general sense, denoting from, or away from, something; as: 1. Indicating an action (expressed in the context) as that of removing, separating, or putting away; away; to a distance; so as not to be on; as, to take off the hat or cloak; to cut, peel, tear off; to march off; to fly off; to beat off; to cast off.

2. Specif., Naut., away from the land, shore, ship, or wind; as, nothing off (see under NOTHING, n.); the ship stood off.

3. Indicating a place or time (denoted by the context) as removed; as, only two weeks off; he stood ten paces off; he had his coat off.

4. Indicating an action or process (in the context) as carried to completion; to the end; to a finish; as, the pain passed off; water cools off; to polish off.

off and on. a Not constantly; not regularly; intermittently; now and then; occasionally. b Naut. On different tacks, now toward, and now away from, the land; — also prepositionally: alternately at a distance from and in proximity to; as, off and on shore. c In alternate connection and disconnection. d Adjectively: Being now off and now on; intermittent; vacillating. — off or on, against or for. Also off nor on, as in neither off nor on, neither one way nor another; irrelevant. Obs. "The questions no way touch upon puritanism, either off or on." Bp. Sanderson.

off, a. [From OFF, adv. when predicative; when attributive, chiefly from OFF-, prefix.] 1. Away; apart; removed; gone off; as, he is off to the war.

2. Hence, specif. or fig.: a More removed or distant; situated to one side (of the confronting or main part); as, an off street. b Designating, or pertaining to, the side [i. e., the right side, the left being called the near side] of an animal or a team farther from the driver when he is on foot; hence, right; as, the off horse or ox in a team; the off leg. c Naut. Farther from the shore; seaward. d Cricket. Designating the side of the field or the wicket opposite to that on which the batsman stands. It is the side on the right or left of the wicket keeper according as the batsman is right-handed or left-handed. e Discontinued; given up; not on; as, the game is off; all bets are off; the gas is off. f Remote or removed from the fact, normal condition, or standard; as, James is wholly off (i. e., mistaken) in his reckoning; the poor fellow was off (i. e., crazy); the market is off (i. e., market prices have declined); an off (remote) chance. Hence, designating time when the ordinary business or course of affairs is suspended, or slackened; as, he took an off day for fishing. "In the off season." Thackeray.

See OFFEND.] Act of offending, or state of being offended; also, that which offends; specif.: a Stumbling, lit. or fig. Obs., except in Bib. usage.

A stumblingstone and rock of offense. Rom. ix. 33.

b An occasion of stumbling or of sin; a stumblingblock.

Woe to that man by whom the offense cometh! Matt. xviii. 7.

c Act of attacking; attack; assault; as, weapons or arms of offense. d Injury; hurt; damage; pain. Obs. or Archaic. e Act of displeasing, affronting, or angering; state of being displeased, affronted, etc.; displeasure; affront. "Just cause of offense." Sir P. Sidney.

I have given my opinion against the authority of two great men, but I hope without offense to their memories. Dryden.

f Disfavor; disgrace. Obs. g Quality or state of being offensive or disgusting; also, that which is offensive or disgusting; a nuisance. Obs. h A breach of moral or social conduct; an infraction of law; a crime; sin; transgression; misdeed; any public wrong, whether a crime or misdemeanor. Offense has no technical legal meaning; but it is sometimes used specifically for an indictable crime (as in the British Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act 1878, 41 & 42 Vict. c. 731), and sometimes for a misdemeanor or a wrong punishable only by fine or penalty. Sometimes a distinction is made between offenses and quasi offenses, as in the second Citation, below.

Who was delivered for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification. Rom. iv. 25.

Offenses are those illegal acts which are done wickedly and with the intent to injure, while quasi offenses are those which cause injury to another, but proceed only from error, neglect, or imprudence. Edwards v. Turner, 6 Rob. (La.) 382.

Syn. — Umbrage, resentment; misdeed, misdemeanor, trespass, delinquency, affront, indignity, outrage, insult.

b A presenting or tender of something for acceptance or rejection, for sale, etc. 2. That which is offered; a gift; specif., that which is presented as an expiation or atonement for sin, or as a free gift; a sacrifice; an oblation; as, a sin offering. 3. Jew. Antiq. One of various ceremonial sacrifices or gifts to the deity. The offerings described in the Levitical code are usually classified as bloody (animal), and bloodless (vegetable, from the produce of the tilled field and the vineyard, but not the garden or orchard), and liquid, offerings. Incense and salt were regularly used with all victims and oblations, part of these being burnt, while part fell to the priest. Among the ancient Jews the principal kinds of offerings were:

burnt offering, the chief animal sacrifice in use from the earliest times, usually in collective worship. The victim was an unblemished bullock, he-goat, or ram. The hide was given to the priest, but all the rest of the animal was burnt on the altar, whence this was sometimes called the whole burnt offering. Also loosely applied to offerings that were partly burnt (Lev. i.). — drink o., a libation of wine, etc., often accompanying other sacrifices and required with every public burnt offering. — freewill o. See under peace offering, below. — guilt o., an animal sacrifice, usually of an unblemished ram, in atonement for trespass against property of God or man. Its ritual resembles the sin offering, with which it is sometimes confused; but its specific feature is preliminary restitution of six fifths the value taken (Num. v. 5 ff.). — heave o., in a peace offering, the portion of the animal which was lifted up by the officiating priest (Ex. xxix. 27; Lev. vii. 32). — meal o., a vegetable sacrifice of a preparation partly of flour and salt, usually mingled with oil (Lev. ii.). — meat o. = MEAL OFFERING.

Meat . . . is in the Authorized Version food in general, not, as now, flesh food only. . . . The meat offering contained no flesh, but was composed of meal and oil. Dict. of Bible (Hastings).

— peace o., an animal sacrifice of an unblemished ox, sheep, or goat in which the fat was burnt, the breast given to the priests, and the remains partaken of by the worshipers and burnt. In Lev. vii. ff. this offering is subdivided into the freewill offering, in which the victim need not be unblemished; the thank offering, in which the remains must be entirely consumed on the day of the sacrifice, and in which was made a peculiar cereal oblation including leavened bread; and the votive offering, made in fulfillment of a vow (Lev. iii.). — sin o., an animal sacrifice in which the blood was smeared on the altar and the choice and fat parts burnt there, but the remainder burnt outside the sanctuary. The victim was, typically, an unblemished she-goat, lamb, turtledove, or pigeon (Lev. iv., v.). — thank o., votive o. See peace offering, above. — wave o., in a peace offering, the portion which was moved backward and forward by the officiating priest, and which was given to Aaron and his sons (Ex. xxix. 26, 27; Lev. vii. 30). 4. Eccl. A sum of money offered at a service; as, a missionary offering. Specif.: Ch. of Eng. Personal tithes payable according to custom, either at certain seasons, as Christmas or Easter, or on certain occasions, as marriages or christenings.

oh, n.; pl. OH'S, OHS (ōz). The interjection or exclamation oh; as, he uttered several oh's.

ohm (ōm), n. [After the German electrician G. S. Ohm.] Elec. The practical unit of electrical resistance, being the resistance of a circuit in which a potential difference of one volt produces a current of one ampere. The true ohm, or theoretical ohm, is a resistance equal to 10^9 units of resistance of the C. G. S. system of electromagnetic units. The international ohm, defined by the International Electrical Congress at Chicago in 1893, is substantially equal to the true ohm and is now legalized by Great Britain, the United States, and various other states. It is the resistance offered to an unvarying electric current by a column of mercury at the temperature of melting ice, 14.4521 grams in mass, of a constant cross-sectional area, and of the length of 106.3 centimeters. The practical ohm, as originally defined in 1863 and called the British Association ohm or ohm, is equal to .9866 international ohm. The so-called legal ohm (defined by the Paris Congress of 1884) is equal to .9972 international ohm. It was never legalized in America or Great Britain.

ohm'age (ōm'ăj), n. Elec. The resistance of a conductor expressed in ohms.

ohm'ic (-ĭk), a. Elec. Of or pert. to an ohm; measured in ohms. — ohmic resistance, Elec., true (electrical) resistance when necessary to distinguish from certain other quantities, as reactance, apparent resistance, etc.

ohm'me'ter (-mē'tẽr), n. [ohm + -meter.] Elec. An instrument for indicating directly resistance in ohms.

Ohm's law (ōmz). Elec. The law that the strength or intensity of an unvarying electrical current is directly proportional to the electromotive force, and inversely proportional to the resistance of the circuit. The law does not hold for alternating currents unless modified so as to include the effects of counter electromotive force.

o-ho' (ō-hō'), interj. [O + ho, interj.] An exclamation of surprise, etc.

-oid (-oid). [Gr. -οειδης, fr. εἶδος form, akin to ἰδεῖν to see, and E. wit: cf. F. -oïde, L. -oides.] A suffix or combining form meaning like, resembling, in the form of; as in anthropoid, asteroid, spheroid. In zoölogy words in -oid are often used as practically equiv. to those in -ine or -id.

O-id'i-um (ō-ĭd'ĭ-ŭm), n.; L. pl. -IA (-ă). [NL., dim. fr. Gr. ᾠόν egg.] Bot. a A form genus of minute fungi of the order Moniliales, the species of which, however, are now considered to represent the conidial stage of various mildews (Erysibaceæ). They occur on various living or decaying animal and vegetable substances. O. albicans is the cause of aphthous sore throat, or thrush. O. tuckeri produces one of the most destructive fungous diseases of the European grape. b [l. c.] One of the concatenate conidia found in this genus.

oil (oil), n. [ME. oile, OF. oile, oille, F. huile, fr. L. oleum, fr. Gr. ἔλαιον. Cf. OLIVE.] 1. Any of a large class of unctuous combustible substances which are liquid, or at least easily liquefiable on warming, and soluble in ether, but not in water. They are usually lighter than water and soluble also in alcohol. According to their origin, oils are classed as vegetable, animal, and mineral, oils; according to their behavior on heating, as fixed, or fatty, and volatile, or essential, oils. Most fixed oils belong chemically to the fats, stearin and palmitin usually prevailing in the solid oils and fats, and olein in liquid ones. See FAT, WAX. The fixed oils are classed as drying, semidrying, and nondrying, oils, according to the degree to which they thicken by absorbing oxygen. The animal and vegetable oils, fats, and waxes have been grouped thus: 1. Olive oil group: vegetable, non-drying. 2. Cottonseed oil group: vegetable, semidrying. 3. Linseed oil group: vegetable, drying. 4. Castor oil group: vegetable, viscous, medicinal. 5. Palm oil group: vegetable, solid fats. 6. Coconut oil group: vegetable, solid, partly waxlike. 7. Lard oil group: animal, liquid fats. 8. Tallow group: animal, solid fats. 9. Whale oil group: marine animals, liquid fats. 10. Sperm oil group: animal, liquid waxes. 11. Spermaceti group: solid waxes. The origin of mineral oils is uncertain. See PETROLEUM.

☞ See TABLE OF OILS AND FATS, on p. 1496.

2. Any substance of an oily consistency; as, oil of vitriol. 3. Art. a Oil color; as, to paint in oils. b A painting in oil colors; —usually in pl.; as, fine oils. Colloq. 4. Short for OILSKIN: —usually in pl. Colloq.

oil of amber, a colorless to yellowish brown oil of empyreumatic odor and acrid taste, made by dry distillation of amber. It is used in medicine as a stimulant, antispasmodic, and rubefacient. — o. of bitter almonds, bitter-almond oil. See OIL, Table I. The artificial or imitation oil of bitter almonds is nitrobenzene. — o. of brick, empyreumatic oil obtained by subjecting a brick soaked in oil to distillation at a high temperature, — used by lapidaries as a vehicle for the emery by which stones and gems are sawn or cut. — o. of cade. See 1st CADE. — o. of caoutchouc, a mixture of hydrocarbons obtained by the dry distillation of caoutchouc; — called also caoutchoucin. — o. of flints, Old Chem., liquor of flints. — o. of mirbane, Chem., nitrobenzene. — o. of myrcia. = BAY OIL a. — o. of philosophers'. See PHILOSOPHER'S OIL. — o. of spike. See 2d ASPIC. — o. of talc, a nostrum of calcined talc, famous in the 17th century as a cosmetic. Obs. — o. of the Dutch chemists, Old Chem., ethylene chloride. — o. of vitriol, concentrated sulphuric acid. See SULPHURIC ACID. — o. of wine, œnanthic ether. — o. ompharine. See OMPHACINE.

oil (oil), v. t.; OILED (oild); OIL'ING. 1. To anoint ceremonially with oil. Obs. 2. To smear or rub over with oil; to lubricate with oil; to furnish or feed with oil. 3. Fig. a To bribe; as, to oil a person's hand. b To make bland or smooth; to flatter; as, to oil the tongue. 4. To turn into, or make of the consistence of, oil.

15. Phys. Geog. Well advanced toward reduction to base level; — said of topography and topographic features. See RIVER.

Syn. — OLD, ANCIENT, VENERABLE, ANTIQUE, ANTIQUATED, ARCHAIC, OBSOLETE. That is OLD (opposed to young, new; see AGED) which has lived or existed long, or which has been long in use or has stood for a long time in a particular relation to something; that is ANCIENT (opposed esp. to modern) which lived, existed, or happened long ago, or which has existed or come down from remote antiquity; as, "O heavens, if you do love old men, . . . if yourselves are old" (Shak.), "the old, feeble, and day-wearied sun" (id.); old wine, old books, old friends; old as the hills; "From the ancient world those giants came" (Milton); "The ancient oracle is accomplished" (Shelley); "some illustrious line so ancient that it has no beginning" (Gibbon); "The most ancient heavens, through thee, are fresh and strong" (Wordsworth). But ancient and old are often interchangeablo; as, "It is an ancient mariner" (Coleridge); "Old, unhappy, far-off things, and battles long ago" (Wordsworth). VENERABLE, as here compared (see AUGUST), suggests the hoariness and dignity of age; as, "an old man . . . [who] appeared the more ancient from his gray locks, that were truly venerable" (Smollett); "the venerable priest . . . lifting up his aged hands" (Keats); "Berkeley can boast an ancestry at least as venerable as . . . Hobbes" (Coleridge). ANTIQUE (in present usage) applies to that which has come down from ancient (esp. classical) times, or which is in some way related to them; that is ANTIQUATED which has gone out of vogue or fashion; the word often implies a slight touch of contempt; as, "the famous antique statue of the huntress Diana" (Thackeray); "the simplicity of antique passion, the homeliness of antique pathos" (Lowell); "Our admiration of the antique is not admiration of the old, but of the natural" (Emerson); "Though she was not really old, she was antique. . . . She had the dignity of a Roman empress" (H. James); "She uses the word 'thereto.' Why use antiquated forms of expression? Why not wear antiquated caps and shoes?" (Sydney Smith); "What are antiquated mythuses to me?" (Carlyle); "He kissed the young man upon the forehead in a gracious, distant, antiquated way" (Stevenson); "Malory . . . is not antiquated; he is old-fashioned, perhaps — a different thing, for so are Bacon and Jeremy Taylor old-fashioned, and Addison and Fielding" (W. P. Ker). That is ARCHAIC which has the characteristics of an earlier, sometimes of a primitive, period; that is OBSOLETE which has gone out of use; "It [the Divine Comedy] is yet the finest book of modern times which has such quality as to possess perpetual contemporaneousness. It has become in part archaic, but it does not become antiquated" (C. E. Norton); "Dictionary of Archaic and Provincial Words" (Halliwell); an archaic bas-relief; "All your opinions will be out of date, your jokes obsolete" (Lamb); "As [a writer's] language grows obsolete, his thoughts must grow obscure" (Dryden); "Ever the solution of the last era has oleander fern. A tropical polypodiaceous fern (Oleandra neriiformis) having coriaceous fronds like oleander leaves.

O'le-a'ri-a (-ā'rĭ-ȧ ; 115), n. [NL., prob. after Adam Olearius, German traveler.] Bot. A large genus of asteraceous shrubs or low trees with alternate leaves and rather large heads of flowers having white or purple rays, the pappus capillary, and the receptacle without chaff. The species are natives of Australia and neighboring islands.

O'le-as'ter (-ăs'tĕr), n. [L., fr. oleo olive, olive tree. See OLIVE, OIL.] a A common shrub or small tree of southern Europe (Elæagnus angustifolia) with fragrant yellow flowers and bitter olive-shaped fruit. It is often cultivated. b Erroneously, the wild variety of the true olive (Olea).

o'le-ate (ō'lē-āt), n. Chem. A salt or ester of oleic acid. Some oleates, as the oleate of mercury, are used in medicine by way of inunction.

o'le-cra'non (ō'lē-krā'nŏn; commonly ō-lĕk'rā-nŏn; 277), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ὠλέκρανον ; ὠλένη elbow + κρανίον the head.] Anat. The large process at the proximal end of the ulna which, projecting behind the elbow joint, forms the bony prominence of the elbow, and receives the insertion of the triceps muscle. — o'le-cra'nal (ō'lē-krā'năl ; ō-lĕk'rā-), a.

o'le-fine (ō'lē-fĭn ; -fēn ; 184), o'le-fin, n. [From OLEFIANT.] Chem. Any member of the series of unsaturated hydrocarbons of which ethylene is a type. See ETHYLENE. — o'le-fin'ic (-fĭn'ĭk), a. — olefinic terpene. See TERPENE.

o-le'ic (ō-lē'ĭk ; ō'lē-ĭk ; 277), a. [L. oleum oil + -ferous.] Producing oil ; as, oleiferous seeds.

o'le-in (ō'lē-ĭn), n. [L. oleum oil : cf. F. oléine.] 1. A fat, liquid at ordinary temperatures, but solidifying at temperatures below 0° C., found abundantly in both the animal and vegetable kingdoms (see FAT). Olein dissolves solid fats, esp. at 30-40° C. Chemically, it is glyceryl trioleate (see OLEIC). It is called also triolein and elain.

2. Also oleine. a The liquid part of any fat ; — distinguished from the stearin, or solid portion. b Com. (1) = SULPHATED OIL. (2) = RED OIL.

O'le-nel'lus (-nĕl'ŭs), n. [NL., dim. fr. Olenus. See OLENUS.] Paleon. A Lower Cambrian genus of trilobites, having fourteen free segments and a spiniform pygidium.

o'lent (ō'lĕnt), a. [L. olens, p. pr. of olere to smell.] Scented ; odorous ; fragrant. Rare. R. Browning O'le-nus (ō'lē-nŭs), n. [NL., fr. L. Olenus, Gr. Ὄλενος, husband of Lethæa, and changed with her into a stone.] Paleon. A genus of trilobites from the Upper Cambrian and Ordovician of Europe, having 12–15 thoracic segments, pleuræ with sharp, back-bent extremities, and a small pygidium. It is the type of a family, O-le'nĭ'dæ (ō-lē'nĭ'dē).

o'le-o- (ō'lē-ō-). Combining form fr. Lat. oleum, meaning oil.

o'le-o-duct' (-dŭkt'), n. [1st oleo- + duct.] A duct or conduit for conveying oil, as from an oil well.

o'le-o-graph' (-grăf'), n. [1st oleo- + -graph.] 1. A kind of chromolithograph imitative of an oil painting.

2. The peculiar form or figure assumed by a drop of oil when placed on water or some other immiscible liquid. — o'le-og'ra-pher (-ŏg'rȧ-fĕr), n. — o'le-o-graph'ic (-ō-grăf'ĭk), a.

o'le-og'ra-phy (-ŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. 1. Art or process of producing the pictures known as oleographs.

2. A process of identifying oils by their oleographs.

o'le-o-mar'ga-rine (-ō-mär'gȧ-rēn ; -rĭn ; 183 : often mispronounced -mär'jĕr-ēn, as if spelt -margerine), n. Also -rin. [2d oleo- + margarine, margarin.] 1. Oleo oil. ☞ Oleomargarine, the original name for oleo oil, is now used only popularly in that sense.

2. A mixture of oleo oil with neutral lard, frequently with the addition of a vegetable oil (usually cottonseed oil), the whole being churned with milk, salted, and worked like butter. Sometimes a small amount of butter is also added. Called also artificial butter, and butterine. See BUTTERINE. — o'le-o-mar-gar'ic (ō'lē-ō-mär-găr'ĭk), a.

oleo oil. An oil expressed from certain animal fats (esp. beef suet), the greater portion of the solid fat, or stearin, being left behind. It is a mixture of olein, palmitin, and a little stearin.

o'le-o-res'in (ō'lē-ō-rĕz'ĭn), n. [1st oleo- + resin.] 1. A natural product consisting essentially of a mixture of essential oil and resin, as copaiba, elemi, etc. See RESIN ; cf. BALSAM, 1 a.

2. Pharm. A liquid or semiliquid preparation extracted (as from capsicum, cubebs, or ginger) by means of ether ; consisting of fixed or volatile oil holding resin in solution. — o'le-o-res'in-ous (-ĭ-nŭs), a.

-oleous. [Cf. L. oleosus.] A combining form for adjectives, signifying oily, of the nature of oil.

ol-fac'tion (ŏl-făk'shŭn), n. [See OLFACTORY.] Physiol. The sense of smell ; act, process, or faculty of smelling.

ol'fac-tom'e-ter (ŏl'făk-tŏm'ē-tĕr), n. [See OLFACTORY ; -METER.] Psychol. Any instrument for measuring power of discrimination in sensations of smell. — ol'fac-to-met'ric (-tō-mĕt'rĭk), a.

ol-fac'to-ry (ŏl-făk'tō-rĭ), a. [L. olfactus, p. p. of olfacere to smell ; olere to have a smell + facere to make. See ODOR ; FACT.] Anat. & Zoöl. Of, pert. to, or connected with, the sense of smell ; as, an olfactory nerve ; an olfactory organ. In vertebrates the olfactory organ is situated in the upper portion of the nasal passages (see NOSE, 2), but in invertebrates the organs which are known or supposed to be organs for smelling are variously placed. The antennæ of insects and other arthropods, certain pits on the heads of various worms, and the osphradia of mollusks, are generally considered as olfactory organs.

olfactory bulb, the anterior somewhat enlarged part of the olfactory lobe or tract, from which the olfactory nerves proceed. See OLFACTORY LOBE. — o. cells, Anat., the essential cells of the olfactory organ. They are spindle-shaped cells with a round nucleus, buried in the mucous membrane (the Schneiderian membrane) of the nose. Their ends are produced into slender processes, that at the outer end being sometimes called the olfactory hair. — o. lobe, a lobe of the brain projecting forward from the anterior lower part of each cerebral hemisphere. In most vertebrates it is well developed, but in man it is reduced and consists of a narrow, elongate body (the olfactory tract) which arises by two roots from the limbic lobe and ends in front in an oval mass known as the olfactory bulb. — o. nerves. a The special nerves of the sense of smell, in man about 20 in number on each side, arising from the under surface of the olfactory bulb. They pass through the cribriform plate and end in the Schneiderian membrane of the nose. They are regarded as collectively constituting the first pair of cranial nerves. b Inaccurately, in man and some mammals, the olfactory tracts. — o. pit. Zoöl. a Any olfactory organ having the form of a small depression, such as occur in Amphioxus and various invertebrates. b Embryol. A depression on the head which afterwards becomes converted into a nasal passage ; a nasal pit. — o. tract. See OLFACTORY LOBE.

ol-fac'to-ry, n. ; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). An olfactory organ ; also, the sense of smell ; — usually in pl.

ol'id (ŏl'ĭd), a. [L. olidus, fr. olere to smell.] Having a strong, disagreeable smell ; fetid. Boyle.

ol'i-gæ'mi-a, ol'i-ge'mi-a (ŏl'ĭ-jē'mĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. See OLIGO- ; -ÆMIA.] Med. A morbid condition in which there is a lessened quantity of the blood.

ol'i-garch (ŏl'ĭ-gärk), n. [Gr. ὀλιγάρχης.] A member of an oligarchy ; one of the rulers in an oligarchy.

ol'i-gar'chic (-gär'kĭk) } a. [Gr. ὀλιγαρχικός : cf. F.
ol'i-gar'chi-cal (-kĭ-kăl) } oligarchique.] Of, pert. to, or supporting, oligarchy. — ol'i-gar'chi-cal-ly, adv.

ol'i-gar'chy (ŏl'ĭ-gär'kĭ), n. ; pl. -CHIES (-kĭz). [Gr. ὀλιγαρχία ; ὀλίγος few, little + ἄρχειν to rule, govern : cf. F. oligarchie.] Government by the few ; a form of government in which the power is in the hands of a few, or a state so governed ; also, those who form the ruling few.

ol'i-go- (ŏl'ĭ-gō-), olig-. Combining form from Greek ὀλίγος, few, little, small ; in Med. denoting lack ; deficiency.

Ol'i-go-cene' (-sēn'), a. [oligo- + Gr. καινός new, recent.] Geol. Designating, or pertaining to, a period of the Tertiary between the Eocene and Miocene. See GEOLOGY, Chart, TERTIARY, a., 3. — n. The Oligocene period or system.

Ol'i-go-chæ'ta (-kē'tȧ), n. pl. [NL. ; Gr. ὀλίγος little, pl., few + χαίτη hair.] Zoöl. An order of chætopod worms which includes the earthworms and related species. They have an all hermaphrodite, the ovaries and testes being few and taining to Olympia in ancient Elis, in the western part of the Peloponnesus. The Olympian games formed the most notable of the four great Panhellenic festivals (the others being the Isthmian, Nemean, and Pythian). The festival was held every fourth year, in the first month after the summer solstice. They claimed a continuous celebration from the year 776 B.C., and this date came to be adopted by the Greeks as the primary date of their chronology, which was reckoned in Olympiads. A general peace was maintained throughout the festival, and for a week before it began and after it ended. The games were of the usual type (see AGON), the prize of the victor consisting of a crown of wild olive, a palm branch, and the right to erect a statue in the Altis, or central inclosure of the sacred precincts. Zeus was the chief deity to which the festival was devoted. A modified revival of the ancient Olympian games, consisting of international athletic games, races, etc., is now held once in four years, the first having been at Athens in 1896.

The worship of the dead, i. e., of the heroes, and of the Chthonian gods, was marked off by broad lines from that of the Olympian gods; and most of what was really deep and heartfelt religion in Greece belongs to the former, while most of what is artistic and a permanent possession for the civilized world belongs to the latter. W. M. Ramsay.

2. Hence, heavenly; celestial.

3. = OLYMPIC, a., 2.

O-lym'pi-an (ō-lĭm'pĭ-ăn), n. 1. A native or inhabitant of Olympia; a participator in the Olympian games.

2. An inhabitant of Olympus; esp., Gr. Relig., one of the deities supposed to dwell upon Olympus, forming a circle of gods of the highest rank under the direct oversight of Zeus. As generally constituted, the Olympians formed a group of twelve, though the same deities were not always chosen to make up this group. Besides Zeus, the Olympian gods included Apollo, Ares, Hermes, Hephæstus, and Poseidon, generally also Dionysus, and sometimes Herakles. The goddesses were, Aphrodite, Artemis, Athena, Demeter, and Hera, and sometimes Hestia. The Olympians were sharply distinguished from the Chthonian gods. Their color was white; their temples faced the east; sacrifices to them were shared by their worshipers in a sacrificial meal, or sacrament. The color preferred by the Chthonian gods was black or blood color, their temples faced westward, and their rites were often held at night and the sacrifices were burnt whole. The distinction, however, was modified by the fact that many Olympians possessed Chthonian forms or attributes under which they were worshiped. See the Citation under OLYMPIAN, a., 1.

O-lym'pi-an-ism (-Iz'm), n. Worship of the Olympian gods, esp. as a dominant cult or religion.

om'i-nous (ŏm'ĭ-nŭs), a. [L. ominosus, fr. omen. See OMEN.] Of or pertaining to an omen or omens; being or exhibiting an omen; significant; portentous; — used both in a favorable and an unfavorable sense, now chiefly in the latter: foreboding or foreshowing evil; inauspicious; attended by ill omens; having a dubious or threatening aspect; as, an ominous dread.

> He had a good ominous name to have made a peace. Bacon.

In the heathen worship of God, a sacrifice without a heart was accounted ominous. South.

Syn. — OMINOUS, PORTENTOUS, SINISTER. That is OMINOUS which foreshadows or foretells the future or (esp.) which is ill-omened or menacing; as, "I should have thought it ominous of declining powers, it is in so sober a tone, its coloring so autumnal, its light everywhere that of an evening sun" (Southey); "undeterred by those ominous voices . . . which are apt to beset all great actions" (W. Pater); an ominous silence. PORTENTOUS is sometimes applied to that which is ominous of calamity; as, "a lurid light above Helm-crag, . . . a burning of portentous red" (Wordsworth); "Lady Griskin's face was like the full moon in a storm of wind, glaring, fiery, and portentous" (Smollett). But portentous often means little more than prodigious, monstrous, wonderful; as, "warlike nations, separate by prodigious walls, vast seas, and portentous hills" (Jer. Taylor); "His gravity was unusual, portentous, and immeasurable" (Dickens); "a literary lady . . . whose portentous name is Plura" (Lamb). SINISTER (see etym.) heightens the implication of something (often covertly) baleful or malign; as, "the sinister rise and fall of lightning unaccompanied by thunder" (H. James); "The week-old honeymoon looked at them out of its clouds with . . . an aged, sinister, and disastrous aspect" (May Sinclair); "In spite of the sensitive delicacy of this face, there was a something accipitrine about it — something sinister and superb, that made me think of a falcon" (Lafcadio Hearn). See MONSTROUS, FORETELL.

An offshoot of this dynasty established the Ommiad dynasty of Spain, founded by Abderrahman in 756 and lasting until 1031, when the caliph Hisham abdicated. — Om-mi'ad, a.

om-ne'i-ty (ŏm-nē'ĭ-tĭ), n. [L. omnis all.] State of being all-comprehensive; allness.

om'ni (ŏm'nĭ-). [L. omnis all.] A combining form used to denote that some action or being (as indicated by the latter element of the compound) affects all things whatsoever, or everything, acts or is present in all places whatsoever, or everywhere; as in omniactive, active in all things or everywhere; omnibenolent, benevolent to all.

om'ni-bus (ŏm'nĭ-bŭs), n. [L., for all, dat. pl. fr. omnis all: cf. F. omnibus. Cf. BUS.] 1. A heavy four-wheeled public vehicle designed to carry a comparatively large number of passengers; a bus; esp., such a vehicle, entered from the rear and having inside a long benchlike seat on each side, with or without seats on top, and drawn by two or more horses, or self-propelled. Omnibuses usually travel back and forth along fixed routes. Hence, loosely, almost any large carriage used as a means of public conveyance for passengers paying separate fares. In Great Britain, by the Towns Police Clauses Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 14, s. 3), an omnibus includes "every omnibus [strictly speaking], char-à-banc, wagonette, brake, stagecoach, and other carriage plying or standing for hire by, or used to carry, passengers at separate fares to, from, or in any part of any particular district in question."

Oneida Community. A communistic society established in 1847–48 at Oneida, New York, by J. H. Noyes (1811–86) with the removal there of a portion of his followers from Putney, Vt., where in 1838 he had introduced the principle of communism into the sect of Perfectionists founded by him in 1834. The most distinctive features of this society were the system of "complex marriage," or community of wives, by which marital relations were carefully regulated and the community occupied the place of the family, and the plan of "mutual criticism," which took the place of the ordinary means of government. The society became prosperous through its industries and had a branch at Wallingford, Conn., but through opposition, esp. on the part of the churches to its system of marriage, it was led to abandon this feature in 1879, and on January 1, 1881, voluntarily to dissolve and reorganize as a joint-stock company. The members were called also Perfectionists.

of God primarily from the nature of being. The pure ontological proof of God rests on an investigation into the nature of being: what sort of being can subsist by itself and what sort is in its very nature dependent on another? A secondary form is the proof based upon the fact of nature of the idea of God as it exists in the human mind. St. Augustine, taking a hint from Plato, argued from the existence of a finite and imperfect human truth and reason that perfect truth and reason must exist as the norm, standard, or governor, only in comparison with which the deficiencies of human truth and reason could appear. St. Anselm argued that the idea of supreme perfection (id quo majus non cogitari potest) necessarily implies the existence of that of which it is the idea: i. e., all merely correlative existences presuppose the existence of the correlates on which they depend and presuppose also the total in which both subsist — this applies also to the entire sphere of correlativity — even to the subjective and objective. St. Anselm, therefore, in this found the one thought which is not only subjective, but objective. "That than which it is not possible to think a greater" therefore is the thought of totality, of true self-contained being, and underlies all our thinking and is always presupposed; it is the psychological basis of the idea of God. W. T. Harris.

on-tol'o-gism (ŏn-tŏl'ō-jĭz'm), n. [ontology + -ism.] Philos. a The method which derives or analyzes reality from a consideration of the categories. b A philosophy founded by Gioberti (1801–52), in Italy, in the interests of the Catholic Church and in criticism of the psychologism in philosophy which he considered the source of Protestantism. The fundamental tenet of his doctrine, which was condemned by the Church, is that the order of intellectual apprehension follows the order of real being and that knowledge of God is intuitive.

on-tol'o-gist (-jĭst), n. One versed in ontology; also, one who teaches ontologism. — on-tol'o-gis'tic (-jĭs'tĭk), a.

on-tol'o-gy (-jĭ), n. [Gr. ὄντα the things which exist (pl. neut. of ὤν, ὄντος, being, p. pr. of εἶναι to be) + -logy: cf. op'er-a (ŏp'ẽr-ä), n. [It., fr. opera work, composition, opposed to an improvisation, fr. L. opera pains, work, fr. opus, operis, work, labor: cf. F. opéra. See OPERATE.] 1. A drama of which music forms an essential part; a drama wholly or mostly sung, consisting typically of recitative, arias, choruses, duets, trios, etc., with orchestral accompaniment, preludes, and interludes, together with appropriate costumes, scenery, and action; drama set to music. Modern opera began with Peri's "Daphne" (1597), written for a circle of Florentine amateurs, enthusiasts of the Renaissance, who thought to revive the musical declamation of the Greek drama. To this end they set aside the contrapuntal style of their time for a simple recitative with orchestral support. The movement was furthered by Monteverde (d. 1643), but the quick popularity of opera was followed by a decline in which either the spectacle or the singing was carried to inartistic excesses. Italian work was dominant, esp. in Germany, throughout the 17th century, though French opera was then founded by Lully (d. 1687), and English by Purcell (d. 1695). A return to the Florentine ideals of dramatic and musical sincerity signalized the work of Gluck (d. 1787), and a blending of dramatic expressiveness with great melodic beauty, that of Mozart (d. 1791). Since then some of the greater names are: (1) in Italian opera — Rossini, Donizetti, Bellini, and Verdi; (2) in French — Cherubini, Spontini, Auber, Meyerbeer, Gounod, and Bizet; (3) in German — Spohr, Weber, and Richard Wagner, the last the most striking figure in the history of opera, whose work embodied a radical change of form. See MUSIC DRAMA.

two and a half feet long, including the scaly prehensile tail. The fur is chiefly dusky grayish mixed with coarse whitish hairs. An abdominal pouch is present and the young are transferred to it immediately after birth. It is chiefly nocturnal, largely arboreal, and almost omnivorous. When caught it feigns death, whence the expression "playing possum." Other genera and species range from Mexico to Paraguay. The mouse opossums (Marmosa) are scarcely larger than rats. The woolly opossums (Caluromys) have no well-developed pouch, and the young are carried on the mother's back. The yapok, or water opossum (Chironectes minimus), of South America, is aquatic.

op-po'nen-cy (ŏ-pō'nĕn-sĭ), n. 1. Opposition; antagonism. 2. Action of maintaining an opposing argument in, or opening, an academical disputation, esp. in trying for a degree, by proposing objections to a tenet. Obs. or Hist., Eng.
op-po'nent (-nĕnt), a. [L. opponens, -entis, p. pr. of opponere to set or place against, to oppose; ob (see OB-) + ponere to place. See POSITION.] 1. Situated in front; opposite; hence, opposing; adverse; antagonistic. Pope. 2. Anat. Bringing into opposition, as an opponens muscle.
op-po'nent, n. 1. One who opposes a tenet or thesis in a disputation, argument, or other verbal controversy; specif., one who opens an academical disputation by attacking some thesis or proposition, in distinction from the respondent, or defendant, who maintains it. Obs. or Hist. 2. One who opposes; an adversary; antagonist; foe.
Syn. — OPPONENT, ADVERSARY, ANTAGONIST agree in the idea of opposition, without of necessity implying personal animosity or hostility (see ENEMY). An OPPONENT is one who is on the opposite side in a contest (esp. an argument or disputation); ANTAGONIST implies sharper opposition, esp. in a struggle or combat for supremacy or control; as, "conscientiously an opponent of the first revolutionary war" (Coleridge); one's opponent in debate. "Antagonist of Heaven's Almighty King" (Milton); "As for Jeffrey, it is a very handsome thing of him to speak well of an old antagonist" (Byron). ADVERSARY ranges in connotation from the idea of mere opposition to that of active hostility; as, "To vindicate the permanency of truth is to dispute without an adversary" (Beattie); "Your adversary the Devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour" (1 Pet. v. 8). See OPPOSITE, HOSTILITY. op'por-tune' (ŏp'ŏr-tūn'; ŏp'ŏr-tūn; 277), a. [F. opportun, L. opportunus, lit., at or before the port; ob (see OB-) + the root of portus port, harbor. See PORT harbor; cf. IMPORTUNE.] 1. Fit; suitable; convenient; ready; hence, seasonable; timely. Milton.
This is most opportune to our need. Shak.
2. Advantageous; helpful; useful. Obs.
3. Exposed; open or liable (to). Obs.
Syn. — Well-timed, seasonable. — OPPORTUNE, TIMELY are often interchangeable. But OPPORTUNE frequently suggests that which fits directly into a given concurrence of circumstances, or into the nick of time; TIMELY applies more generally to that which is well-timed or seasonable; as, "The murkiest den, the most opportune place, the strong'st suggestion . . . shall never melt mine honor into lust" (Shak.); an opportune resignation opened the way to his own advancement; by an opportune chance the door was open; "To me alone there came a thought of grief; a timely utterance gave that thought relief" (Wordsworth); "thy timely mandate" (id.); "It was the church's eloquent and liberalized expansion to the youthful heart in its timely purpose to seek the best" (W. Pater). See OPPORTUNITY.
op'por-tu'nism (-tū'nĭz'm), n. [Cf. F. opportunisme.] Art, policy, or practice of taking advantage, as in politics, of opportunities or circumstances, or, often, of seeking immediate advantage with little regard for principles or ultimate consequences. op'por-tu'nist (-nĭst), n. [Cf. F. opportuniste.] One who advocates or practices opportunism. op'por-tu'ni-ty (-nĭ-tĭ), n.; pl. -TIES (-tĭz). [F. opportunité, L. opportunitas. See OPPORTUNE.] 1. Quality or state of being opportune; opportuneness. Rare.
2. Fit or convenient time; a time or place favorable for executing a purpose; a suitable combination of conditions; suitable occasion; chance.
A wise man will make more opportunities than he finds. Bacon.
3. Convenience or advantage of situation; fitness. Obs.
4. Importunity; — an erroneous use. Obs. Jer. Taylor.
Syn. — Chance. — OPPORTUNITY, OCCASION agree in the idea of a condition or juncture of circumstances favorable to some end. OCCASION, as here compared (see OCCASION), often implies little more than a possibility or chance of giving rise to some result; an OPPORTUNITY is a specific, fit, and (esp.) opportune occasion; as, "Ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel" (Ezek. xviii. 3); "You have many opportunities to cut him off" (Shak.); to take occasion to speak of something, to avail one's self of an opportunity to speak. See OPPORTUNE.
op-pos'a-bil'i-ty (ŏ-pōz'ā-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n. State or quality of being opposable.
op-pos'a-ble (ŏ-pōz'ā-b'l), a. 1. Capable of being opposed or resisted.
2. Capable of being placed opposite something else; as, the thumb is opposable to the forefinger.
op-pos'al (ŏ-pōz'ăl), n. 1. A putting of questions; examination; posing; that which poses or puzzles. Obs.
2. a Opposition. Rare. b Astron. = OPPOSITION, 1 a. Obs.

2. = 1st APPOSE, 2. Obs.
3. To place in front of, or over against; to exhibit.
Her grace sat down . . .
In a rich chair of state; opposing freely
The beauty of her person to the people. Shak.
4. a To proffer; offer. Obs. b To lay bare; expose. Obs.
5. To put in opposition, with a view to counterbalance or countervail; to set against, whether by way of contrast or of resistance; to offer antagonistically.
I may . . . oppose my single opinion to his. Locke.
6. To stand opposite to, or facing; as, to oppose the south. Now Rare.
7. To resist or antagonize, whether by physical means or by arguments, etc.; to contend against; to confront; resist; withstand; as, to oppose the king; oppose a petition.
Syn. — Withstand, gainsay, contravene, contradict, oppugn, counteract, check, baffle, thwart. — OPPOSE, RESIST agree in the idea of setting one's self against something, and are often interchangeable. But RESIST frequently implies more active striving than OPPOSE, esp. against something which is itself exerting adverse energy or force; as, to oppose a measure, an idea; to resist attack, arrest; "multitudes . . . banded to oppose his high decree" (Milton); "Ye have not yet resisted unto blood, striving against sin" (Heb. xii. 4); "I am a simple woman, much too weak to oppose your cunning" (Shak.); "It boots not to resist both wind and tide" (id.). See OPPONENT.
op-pose', v. i. 1. To offer hard or searching questions, or objections, as to a thesis. Obs. or Hist.
2. To act adversely or in opposition. Obs.
op-posed' (ŏ-pōzd'), p. a. 1. Set or placed in opposition; opposite; contrary; adverse.
2. Mach. Opposite to each other; placed on opposite sides of a common crank shaft; — said of two engine cylinders. Hence, of an engine, having cylinders so placed.
opposed propriety, Medieval Music, a time quality of a ligature.
Opposed propriety produces two semibreves . . . Whence, if several notes come into a ligature, they are as follows: each perfect note is long, each imperfect note is a breve except those that are made semibreves by opposed propriety.
op'po-site (ŏp'ō-zĭt), a. [F., fr. L. oppositus, p. p. of opponere. See OPPONENT.] 1. Set over against (that which is at the other end or side of an intervening line or space); facing; — often with to. Thus in a quadrilateral opposite sides are distinguished from adjacent sides, between which the intervening space at one point becomes zero; and opposite angles at the ends of a diagonal, from adjacent angles. With respect to a given line two points are opposite when their connecting line would cross it at right angles; in a circle, two points in the circumference are opposite only when at the ends of a diameter.
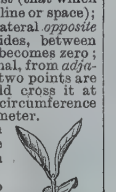
2. Bot. a Situated in pairs on an axis, each being separated from the other by half the circumference of the axis, as leaves. b With reference to floral parts, = SUPERPOSED.



Opposite Leaves.

3. Contrarily turned or moving; as, two points move in opposite directions when moving apart along the same straight line, or when moving in the same directions as two such points, but along parallel lines.
4. Of persons: opposed or hostile. Obs.
5. Diametrically different; contrary; repugnant; antagonistic.
Novels, by which the reader is misled into another sort of pleasure opposite to that which is designed in an epic poem. Dryden.
Particles of speech have divers, and sometimes almost opposite, significations. Locke.
☞ By omission of to, opposite often has the construction of a preposition; as in, opposite the bank.
Syn. — OPPOSITE, CONTRARY, CONTRADICTORY. OPPOSITE implies diametrical difference in position or nature, but does not necessarily suggest antagonism; CONTRARY commonly implies mutual opposition or divergence, and often connotes antagonism; but the two words are not always clearly distinguished as, opposite points on a circle, opposite directions, the one character is the opposite of the other, on opposite sides of a dispute; contrary directions, contrary propositions, cf. "on the contrary." CONTRADICTORY is a stronger term than opposite or contrary, implying variance or contrariety that admits no medium; as, contradictory terms, statements, attributes. See ADVERSE, INCONSISTENT, CONVERSE.
2. One who opposes; an opponent; an antagonist. Obs. or R. "The opposites of this day's strife." Shak.
3. That which is opposed, or contrary; as, sweetness and its opposite; vice is the opposite of virtue.
The virtuous man meets with more opposites and opponents than any other. Landor.
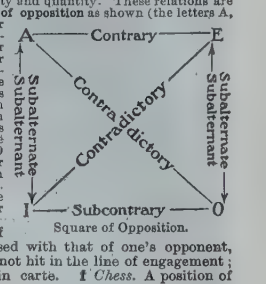
op-pos'i-ti- (ŏ-pŏz'ĭ-tĭ-). A combining form from Latin oppositus, meaning opposite.
op'po-si'tion (ŏp'ō-zĭsh'ŭn), n. [L. oppositio: cf. F. opposition. See OPPOSITE.] 1. Act of setting opposite, or over against, or the state or position of being so set. Specif.: a [the earliest sense in English] Astron. The situation of a heavenly body with respect to another when differing from it in longitude by 180°, that is, when directly opposite to it; esp., such position of a planet or satellite with respect to the sun; — signified by the symbol ☍; as, ☿ ☍ ☉, opposition of Jupiter to the sun. Cf. CONJUNCTION, 2. b Rhet. A setting of one proposition against another; a counter proposition. Obs. c The putting of questions; inquisition; also, the putting forward of objections to be answered by one defending a thesis. Obs. d Logic. The relation between two propositions when, having the same subject and predicate, they differ in quantity, in quality, or in both. Logicians recognize four kinds of opposition: (1) Contrariety, obtaining between a universal affirmative and a universal negative proposition, where the difference is one of quality only. (2) Subcontrariety, obtaining between a particular affirmative and a particular negative, where the difference is of quality only. (3) Subalternation, obtaining between a universal and a particular affirmative, or between a universal and a particular negative, where the difference is one of quantity only. (4) Contradiction, obtaining between a universal affirmative and a particular negative, or between a universal negative and a particular affirmative, where the difference is of both quality and quantity. These relations are represented in the square of opposition as shown (the letters A, E, I, and O standing for universal affirmative, universal negative, particular affirmative, and particular negative propositions, respectively). An immediate inference by opposition is an inference from the truth or falsity of a proposition to the truth or falsity of its opposite. Thus, if A be true, E is false, I is true, O is false; if A be false, either E or I may be true, though not both, while O is true. Similar inferences may be drawn from the truth or falsity of E, I, and O.



Square of Opposition.

e Fencing. A position of one's blade, when crossed with that of one's opponent, such that the latter cannot hit in the line of engagement; as, to take opposition in carte. f Chess. A position of the king preventing the advance of the adverse king either directly or obliquely.
2. Hostile or contrary action or condition; resistance.
3. An opposite, contrary, or contrast. Obs.
4. That which opposes; an obstacle; specif., the aggregate of those opposing; hence, in politics and parliamentary practice, the party opposed to the party in power.
op'po-si'tion-al (-zĭ), a. Pert. to or constituting opposition.
op-pos'i-tive (ŏ-pŏz'ĭ-tĭv), a. [See OPPOSITE.] Capable of being put in opposition; opposing. — op-pos'i-tive-ly, adv. — op-pos'i-tive-ness, n.
op-press' (ŏ-prĕs'), v. t.; OP-PRESSED' (-prĕst'); OP-PRESS'ING. [F. oppresser, LL. oppressare, fr. L. opprimere, oppressum; ob (see OB-) + premere to press. See PRESS.] 1. To hurt by pressing; to crush; — said of weight. Obs.
2. Hence: a To overwhelm, as by numbers. Now Rare. b Fig.: To weigh heavily upon; to weigh down; as, he was oppressed by a sense of failure: "With love and wine at once oppressed." Dryden. c To put down; to extinguish; to suppress. Obs.
The mutiny he there hastes to oppress. Shak.
3. To crush, burden, or trample down by abuse of power or authority; to tyrannize over; to treat with unjust rigor or with cruelty.
Behold the kings of the earth; how they oppress thy chosen! Milton.
4. Obs. a To ravish; rape. b To harass; distress. c To conceal. d To shut up; stop (the ears, eyes, etc.).
Syn. — OPPRESS, DEPRESS. To OPPRESS, as here compared, is to weigh upon or burden, as by the imposition of a load; to DEPRESS is to bring down or cause to sink (esp. in value, vigor, and the like); the word is used particularly of that which lowers the spirits; as, "The weary world of waters between us oppresses the imagination" (Lamb); "The long dull evenings in these dull lodgings when one is weary with work depress one sadly" (J. R. Green); "the oppression produced by a close atmosphere" (H. Spencer); "an utter depression of soul, . . . an iciness, a sinking, a sickening of the heart, an unredeemed dreariness of thought" (Poe); "a blaze of oppressive heat" (Jane Austen); "the pressure of any family, which was depressing" (Scott); cf. the oppression of slavery, depression in trade. See SUPPRESS, MELANCHOLY.
op-pres'sion (ŏ-prĕsh'ŭn), n. [F., fr. L. oppressio.] 1. That which oppresses; unjust or cruel exercise of authority or power; cruelty; severity; tyranny. "The multitude of oppressions." Job xxxv. 9.
2. Act of weighing down (a person, the mind, etc.); also, state of being weighed down, as by misfortune. Obs.
3. A sense of heaviness or obstruction in the body or mind; depression; dullness; lassitude; as, an oppression of spirits; an oppression of the lungs.
There gentle Sleep
First found me, and with soft oppression seized My drowsed sense. Milton.
4. Ravishment; rape. Obs. Chaucer.

op-pos'er (ŏ-pōz'ẽr), n. One who opposes. [p. pr.] op-pos'ing-ly, adv. of opposing.
op'po-sit. Opposite. Ref. Sp. op-pos'it (ŏ-pŏz'ĭt), v. t. & v. i. [See OPPOSITE, a.] To set up the contrary; to object. Rare.
op'po-site-ly, adv. of OPPOSITE.
op'po-site-ness, n. See -NESS. op-pos'i-ti-fo'lious (ŏ-pŏz'ĭ-tĭ-fō'lĭ-ŭs), a. [oppositi- + folious.] Bot. Opposite to the leaf, as the tendril of a grapevine. Rare. b Having opposite leaves. Rare.
op'po-si'tion-ist, n. See -IST.
op'po-si'tion-less, a. See -LESS.
op-pos'i-ti-pet'al-ous, a. [oppositi- + petalous.] Bot. Superposed upon a petal. Rare.
op-pos'i-ti-fo'rous (ŏ-pŏz'ĭ-tĭf'ō-rŭs; 201), a. [oppositi- + florous.] Bot. Having opposite peduncles. Rare.
op-pos'i-ti-fo'li-ous, a. [oppositi- + folious.] Bot. a Placed opposite to a leaf, as the tendril of a grapevine. Rare. b Having opposite leaves. Rare.
op'po-si'tion-ist, n. See -IST.
op'po-si'tion-less, a. See -LESS.
op-pos'i-ti-pet'al-ous, a. [oppositi- + petalous.] Bot. Superposed upon a petal. Rare.
op-pos'i-tor, n. [Cf. OPPOSITION.] An opponent. Obs. op-po'sive, a. Given to opposing. Obs.
op-pos'sum. + OPOSSUM.
‖ op-pos'su-it (ŏ-pŏz'ū-ĭt) [L.] Nature has opposed. Adapted from Juvenal (x. 152). op-po'sure, n. [oppose + -ure.] Opposition. Obs.
op-press', n. [OF. oppresse.] Oppression. Obs. [bruised.]
op-pressed', p. a. Her. Depressed or lowered. op-pres'ser, n. Oppressor. Obs.
op-pres'siv. Oppressive. R. Sp.

harsh; as, oppressive taxes; oppressive exactions of service; an oppressive game law. Macaulay.
2. Using oppression; tyrannical; as, oppressive rulers.
3. Heavy; overpowering, hard to be borne; as, oppressive grief or heat.

To ease the soul of one oppressive weight. Pope.

op-pres'sor (ŏ-prĕs'ẽr), n. [L.; cf. F. oppresseur.] One that oppresses, esp. with unjust rigor, exactions, or the like.

op-pro'bri-ous (ŏ-prō'brĭ-ŭs), a. [L. opprobriosus, fr. opprobrium: cf. OF. opprobrieus. See OPPROBRIUM.] 1. Expressive of opprobrium; attaching disgrace; reproachful; scurrilous; as, opprobrious language.

They . . . vindicate themselves in terms no less opprobrious than those by which they are attacked. Addison.

2. Infamous; despised; rendered hateful; involving or bringing opprobrium; as, an opprobrious name, conduct.

This dark, opprobrious den of shame. Milton.

Syn. — Disgraceful, reproachful, abusive, insulting, offensive; contemptuous, insolent, disdainful; gross, vile, vulgar, low, foul, indecent, scurrile. OPPROBRIOUS, CONTUMELIOUS, SCURRILOUS. OPPROBRIOUS implies abusive reproach; CONTUMELIOUS adds to opprobrious the implication of insolent contempt; SCURRILOUS, that of grossness and vulgarity; as, "This party . . . has generally mentioned [the allies] under opprobrious appellations, and in such terms of contempt or execration as never had been heard" (Burke); "Curving a contumelious lip, [he] gorgonized me from head to foot with a stony British stare" (Tennyson); "They never fail to attack the passengers with all kinds of scurrilous, abusive, and indecent terms" (Fielding). See ASPERSE, ABUSE, CENSURE.

op-pro'bri-um (-ŭm), n. [L.; ob (see OB-) + probrum reproach, disgrace.] 1. The disgrace that follows from, or is attached to, conduct considered evil or wrong; infamy; reproach mingled with contempt; abusive language.

Being both dramatic author and dramatic performer, he found himself heir to a twofold opprobrium. De Quincey.

2. That which causes disgrace or elicits reproach.

op-pugn' (ŏ-pūn'), v. t. & i.; OP-PUGNED' (-pūnd'); OP-PUGN'ING. [L. oppugnare; ob (see OB-) + pugnare to fight: cf. OF. oppugner. See IMPUGN.] To fight against; to assail or call in question; to be in conflict with; to attack; oppose; resist; controvert.

They said the manner of their impeachment they could not but conceive did oppugn the rights of Parliament. Clarendon.

Ops (ŏps), n. [L.] Rom. Relig. An ancient Italian goddess of the harvest, in early times associated with Consus. Later she was identified with the Greek Rhea, consort of Cronus, and was therefore made the consort of Saturn. Her festival was the O-pa'li-a (ō-pā'lĭ-ȧ), Dec. 19. She was also called Op'i-con-sĭ'va (kŏn-sĭ'vȧ) and under this name celebrated in the Op'i-con-siv'i-a (ŏp'ĭ-kŏn-sĭv'ĭ-ȧ), Aug. 25.

-op'si-a (-ŏp'sĭ-ȧ), -op'sis (-ŏp'sĭs), -op'sy (-ŏp'sĭ). Combining forms from Greek ὄψις, appearance, sight, vision; as, anopsia, anopsy, photopsia, etc. Cf. -OPIA.

op'si-om'e-ter (ŏp'sĭ-ŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [Gr. ὄψις sight + -meter.] An instrument for measuring the limits of distinct vision.

-opsis. Combining form fr. Gr. ὄψις, sight. See -OPSIA.

op-son'ic (ŏp-sŏn'ĭk), a. Bacteriol. Of, pertaining to, or affected by, opsonin. — opsonic index, the ratio between the number of bacteria destroyed through the action of leucocytes in normal blood serum and the number destroyed in that to which opsonin has been added.

op'so-nin (ŏp'sŏ-nĭn), n. [Gr. ὀψωνεῖν to buy victuals, to cater.] Bacteriol. A constituent of blood serum which renders invading pathogenic bacteria more susceptible to the action of the phagocytes.

-opsy. Combining form fr. Gr ὄψις, sight. See -OPSIA.

opt (ŏpt), v. i.; OPT'ED; OPT'ING. [F. opter, L. optare.] To make a choice; choose; as, to opt in his favor. Now Rare.

op'tate (ŏp'tāt), v. i. [L. optatus, p. p. of optare.] To choose; to elect. Rare.—op-ta'tion (ŏp-tā'shŭn), n. Rare.

op'ta-tive (ŏp'tȧ-tĭv; see note below), a. [L. optativus: cf. F. optatif.] Expressing desire or wish. — optative mood, Gram., that mood or form of a verb, as in Greek, Sanskrit, etc., in which a wish or desire, and certain related distinctions, are expressed. It is an original part of the Indo-European verb, having for its sign an i- element inserted between the tense sign and the personal endings.

op'ta-tive, n. 1. Something to be desired. Rare.
2. [Cf. F. optatif.] Gram. The optative mood, or a verb or verbal form denoting it.

op'tic (ŏp'tĭk), a. [F. optique, Gr. ὀπτικός; akin to ὄψις sight, ὄπωπα I have seen, ὄψομαι I shall see, and to ὄσσε the two eyes, ὤψ face, L. oculus eye. See OCULAR, EYE; cf. CANOPY, OPHTHALMIA.] 1. Of or pert. to vision. Obsolete.

The moon, whose orb Through optic glass the Tuscan artist views. Milton.

2. Of or pert. to the eye; ocular; as, the optic nerves.
3. Relating to the science of optics; optical.

optic angle. ◆ See BINOCULAR PARALLAX. ◆ = VISUAL ANGLE. ◆ Min. The angle between the optic axes of a biaxial crystal. — ◆. axis. ◆ Optics. = OPTICAL AXIS. ◆ Min. The line in a doubly refracting crystal, in the direction of which no double refraction occurs. A uniaxial crystal has one such line, a biaxial crystal has two. — ◆. chiasm, chiasma, or commissure. See OPTIC NERVE. — ◆. disk, the nearly circular light-colored area at the back of the retina where the optic nerve enters the eyeball; — usually synonymous with optic papillus. — optic entrance. = OPTIC DISK. — ◆. equation, Astron., the apparent variation in a planet's orbital motion due to its varying distance from the earth. — ◆. ganglia, Zoöl., the corpora bigemina. See CORPORA QUADRIGEMINA. — ◆. groove, Anat., a narrow transverse groove near the front of the superior surface of the body of the sphenoid bone, in which the optic chiasma rests. It is continuous on each side with a foramen (optic foramen) for the passage of the optic nerve and ophthalmic artery. — ◆. lobes, Zoöl., the corpora bigemina. See CORPORA QUADRIGEMINA. — ◆. nerve, Anat. & Zoöl., the special nerve of sight, connecting the eye and the optic centers of the brain (see BRAIN, 1). Vertebrates above Amphioxus have two optic nerves, which form the second pair of cranial nerves. They pass out from the ventral region of the diencephalon, and in the cyclostomes go directly to the eye of the corresponding side, but in most classes of vertebrates they form a commissure or decussation (the optic chiasma or commissure), most of the fibers passing to the opposite eye, but some to the eye of the same side. In teleost fishes they simply cross, all the fibers passing to the opposite eye. Penetrating the sclerotic and retina, each nerve breaks up into branches which spread over the anterior surface of the retina. (See EYE, 1.) The term optic nerve is often restricted to the part distal to the chiasma, the proximal parts being called the optic tracts and (with the chiasma) regarded as a part of the brain. — neuritis, Med., inflammation of the optic nerve. — ◆. papillus, the slight elevation produced by the thick bundles of the fibers of the optic nerve in entering the eyeball. Cf. OPTIC DISK. — ◆. thalamus (pl. -AMI), Anat., either of the pair of oblong masses of gray matter (covered on their free surfaces with a layer of white matter) situated on either side of the third ventricle of the brain. — ◆. tract, Anat. & Zoöl. See OPTIC NERVE. — ◆. tube, a telescope. Archaic. — ◆. vesicles, Embryol. ◆ The outgrowths (at first hollow and communicating with the cavities of the brain) which grow out from the forebrain of vertebrate embryos and, becoming invaginated into a cuplike form, develop into the retina. They are called primitive optic vesicles to distinguish them from: ◆ The secondary optic vesicles, which are the spaces between the retina and lens in which the vitreous humor develops.

2. An eyeglass. Obs. Herbert.
3. An optician; also, optics. Obs.

op'ti-cal (ŏp'tĭ-kăl), a. [See OPTIC, a.] 1. Relating to the science of optics; as, an optical instrument.
2. Relating to vision; optic.

optical activity, Physics & Chem., ability to rotate the plane of polarized light. See POLARIZATION, 2. — ◆. anomaly, Min., an apparent lack of harmony between the crystal form of a mineral and its optical properties. — ◆. axis. ◆ A straight line from the posterior wall of the eye through the center of curvature of the lens and cornea. See VISION. ◆ Crystal. See ◆ n., 4 d. — ◆. center, on the axis of a lens, the point so situated (either within or near the lens) that no rays passing through it are changed in direction. — ◆. circle, a graduated circle used for the measurement of angles in optical experiments. — ◆. correction, Arch., a slight modification of mathematically correct lines for the purpose of making them appear correct to the eye. — ◆. cube. = BIPRISM b. — ◆. disk, Optics, an opaque disk with a half disk of glass superimposed on its white face so that diameters correspond. It is used to show reflection and refraction of a pencil of light passing radially across the disk. — ◆. double, Astron., a double star the connection of whose members is apparent only and due to their being nearly in the same line of sight. Cf. BINARY STAR. — ◆. equation, Astron., the angle at the center of the epicycle between the center of the orbit and the earth's center. — ◆. glass, an extra fine quality of flint or crown glass used for making lenses, prisms, etc. — ◆. isomerism. See ISOMERIC, 1. — ◆. lever, Physics, any arm or lever the displacement of which is measured by an attached mirror and a fixed telescope and scale, commonly used for measuring small lengths. — ◆. parallax = BINOCULAR PARALLAX. — ◆. square, Surv., a small hand instrument for laying off a right angle by means of two mirrors set at an angle of 45 degrees. — ◆. telegraphy, Mil., signaling by flags, heliograph, torches, rockets, etc. — ◆. train, a series of prisms or lenses.

1 Optical Square; 2 Diagram showing its use. The lines from a and b to the instrument are at right angles when b can be seen in Mirror d (by reflection from Mirror c) in line with a.

op'ti-cal-ly, adv. By optics or sight; with reference to optics. — optically active, ◆. inactive, etc. See ACTIVE, 10, INACTIVE C, etc. — ◆. double, appearing double to the eye; — said of two stars apparently close together, but a vast distance from each other in the line of sight. — ◆. positive, ◆. negative. See DOUBLE REFRACTION.

op-ti'cian (ŏp-tĭ'shĭ'ăn), n. [Cf. F. opticien. See OPTIC, a.] 1. One skilled in optics. Obs. or R.
2. One who makes, or who deals in, optical glasses and instruments.

op'tic'i-ty (ŏp-tĭs'ĭ-tĭ), n. Physics & Chem. Optical activity or rotatory power. See POLARIZATION, 2.

op'ti-co-. A combining form for optic.

op'tics (ŏp'tĭks), n. [Cf. F. optique, L. optice, Gr. ὀπτική (sc. θεωρία). See OPTIC.] That branch of physical science which treats of the nature and properties of light, the laws of its modification by opaque and transparent bodies, and the phenomena of vision.

op'ti-graph (ŏp'tĭ-grăf), n. [optic + -graph. See OPTIC, a.] An instrument for copying landscapes, etc. It consists of a telescope with a diagonal eyepiece, suspended vertically in gimbals beneath a fixed diagonal mirror. By moving the telescope so that a dot in the eyepiece appears to pass over the outlines of objects, a pencil attached to the telescope is made to copy the outline on paper.

op'ti-mate (ŏp'tĭ-māt), a. [L. optimas, -atis, adj., optimates, n. pl., the adherents of the best men, the aristocrats, fr. optimus the best.] Of or pert. to the nobility or aristocracy. — n. A noble or aristocrat; a chief man, as in a city.

op'ti-ma'tes (-mā'tēz), n. pl. [L. See OPTIMATE.] 1. The nobility or aristocracy of ancient Rome, as opposed to the populares.

2. [cap.] A.-S. Hist. The members, collectively, of the national councils of Mercia, Wessex, and Sussex.

op'ti-me (ŏp'tĭ-mē), n. [L., adv. fr. optimus the best.] In Cambridge Univ., Eng., a man who obtains honors, but fails to get placed among the wranglers, in the mathematical tripos; — called senior optime or junior optime according as he is placed in the second or third class.

op'ti-mism (ŏp'tĭ-mĭz'm), n. [F. optimisme, fr. L. optimus the best.] 1. Metaph. & Ethics. The opinion or doctrine that everything in nature, being the work of God, is ordered for the best, or that the ordering of things in the universe is such as to produce the highest good. Cf. PESSIMISM. Optimism is the original name of Leibnitz's doctrine that the world is the best possible world, based on the argument that God, being all-wise, must know all possible worlds; being all-powerful, must be able to create whichsoever he might choose; and, being all-good, must choose the best.
2. The quality of being the best or for the best.
3. A disposition to take the most hopeful view; — opposed to pessimism.

op'ti-mist (-mĭst), n. [Cf. F. optimiste.] 1. Metaph. An adherent of the doctrine of optimism.
2. One who looks on the bright side of things, or takes hopeful views; — opposed to pessimist.

op'ti-mist, a. Pertaining to optimists or optimism.

op'ti-mis'tic (-mĭs'tĭk), a. 1. Metaph. Of or pertaining to optimism; tending, or conforming, to the opinion that all events are ordered for the best.
2. Hopeful; sanguine; as, an optimistic view.

op'ti-mum (-mŭm), n. [L., prop. neut. of optimus best.] 1. The best or most favorable degree, quantity, etc.
2. Biol. The most favorable condition as to temperature, light, moisture, food, etc., for the growth and reproduction of an organism. Often used adjectively; as, optimum conditions, optimum temperature, etc.
optimum capacity (of an induction coil), Elec., the capacity which, if placed across the break, will give the longest spark in the secondary circuit.

op'tion (ŏp'shŭn), n. [L. optio; akin to optare to choose, wish: cf. F. option.] 1. The exercise of the power of choice; choice.

Transplantation must proceed from the option of the people, else it sounds like an exile. Bacon.

2. Power of choosing; the right of choice or election; an alternative.

There is an option left to the United States of America, whether they will be respectable and prosperous, or contemptible and miserable, as a nation. Washington.

3. That which is offered for choice, or which is chosen, as an elective study in a university.
4. Ch. of Eng. A right formerly belonging to an archbishop to select any one dignity or benefice in the gift of a suffragan bishop consecrated or confirmed by him, for bestowal by himself when next vacant. It was annulled by Parliament in 1845.
5. A wishing; a wish. Obs. Bp. Hall.
6. Fin. & Com. A stipulated privilege, given to a party in a time contract, of demanding its fulfillment on any day within a specified limit.

Syn. — See ALTERNATIVE.

op'tion-al (-ăl), a. Involving an option; depending on the exercise of an option; left to one's discretion or choice; not compulsory; as, optional studies; it is optional with you to go or stay. — n. An optional study; an elective. — op'tion-al-ly, adv.

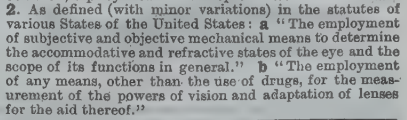
op'to-gram (ŏp'tō-grăm), n. [opto- + -gram.] Physiol. An image of external objects fixed on the retina by the photochemical action of light on the visual purple. See VISUAL PURPLE.

op-tog'ra-phy (ŏp-tŏg'rȧ-fĭ), n. [opto- + -graphy.] Physiol. The production of an optogram on the retina; the fixation of an image in the eye. See OPTOGRAM.

op-tom'e-ter (ŏp-tŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [opto- + -meter.] Physiol. An instrument for measuring the distance of distinct vision, or the accommodative scope of the eye, mainly for the selection of eyeglasses.



Optometer.

op-tom'e-trist (ŏp-tŏm'ē-trĭst), n. One who is skilled in or practices optometry.

op-tom'e-try (-trĭ), n. 1. Med. Measurement of the range of vision, esp. by means of the optometer.
2. As defined (with minor variations) in the statutes of various States of the United States: ◆ "The employment of subjective and objective mechanical means to determine the accommodative and refractive states of the eye and the scope of its functions in general." ◆ "The employment of any means, other than the use of drugs, for the measurement of the powers of vision and adaptation of lenses for the aid thereof."

op'pro-bra'tion, n. [L. opprobratio, fr. opprobrare to reproach.] Opprobrious speaking; taunting. Obs. [Obs.] op-pro'bre, n. [F.] Opprobry. op-pro'bri-ate, v. t. [LL. opprobriare.] To make, or treat as, opprobrious. Rare.
‖ op-pro'bri-um me'di-co'rum (mē'dĭ-kō'rŭm; 201). [L.] The reproach of physicians.
op-pro'bry, n. Obs. 1. Opprobrium.
2. Opprobrious language or treatment. op-pug'nate, v. t. [L. oppugnatus, p. p.] To oppugn. Obs. —
op-pugn'er (ŏ-pūn'ẽr), n. One that oppugns. opresse. † OPPRESS.
O. P. Riots. [That is, Old Prices Riots.] Popular disturbances caused by an advance in the rates of admission at the New Covent Garden Theater in London, in 1809. They continued for several months, and some concessions were eventually made.
op-sig'a-my (ŏp-sĭg'ȧ-mĭ), n. [Gr. ὀψιγαμία.] Marriage at an advanced age. Rare.
op'si-math (ŏp'sĭ-măth), n. [Gr. ὀψιμαθής late in learning.] One who begins to learn late in life. Rare.
op-sim'a-thy (ŏp-sĭm'ȧ-thĭ), n. [Gr. ὀψιμαθία.] Education late in life. Rare.
op'so-ma'ni-a (ŏp'sŏ-mā'nĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ὀψομανία; ὄψον rich fare + μανία madness.] Med. Morbid desire for a special food. — op'so-ma'ni-ac (-ăk), n.
op'so-na'tion. † OBSONATION. op-so'ni-um (ŏp-sō'nĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. -NIA (-ȧ). [L., fr. Gr. ὀψώνιον.] Food used as a relish. R.
opt. Abbr. Optative; optics. op'ta-ble (ŏp'tȧ-bl), a. [L. optabilis.] That may be chosen; desirable. — op'ta-ble-ness, n. — op'ta-bly, adv. All Rare.
op'ta-tiv. Optative. Ref. Sp.
op'ta-tive-ly, adv. of OPTATIVE. op'ti-cist (ŏp'tĭ-sĭst), n. A specialist in the science of optics. op'ti-co-cil'i-a-ry (ŏp'tĭ-kō-sĭl'ĭ-ȧ-rĭ), a. Anat. Pertaining to the optic and ciliary nerves. op'ti-co-pu'pil-la-ry, n. Anat. Pertaining to the optic nerve and the pupil.
op'ti-ma-cy (ŏp'tĭ-mȧ-sĭ), n. See OPTIMATES. 1. Government by the nobility. Rare.
2. Collectively, the nobility. R. op'ti-mal (-măl), a. [L. optimus best.] Most suitable or favoring. Rare.
op-tim'i-ty (ŏp-tĭm'ĭ-tĭ), n. [L. optimitas, fr. optimus the best.] State or fact of being best. Rare.
‖ op'ti-mum'que est a'ri-e'na in-sa'ni-a fru'i. [L.] And it is best to profit by the madness or folly of others.
Op'ti-mus Max'i-mus. [L., best (and) greatest.] See JUPITER. optique. † OPTIC. op'tive (ŏp'tĭv), a. [L. optivus chosen.] That may be chosen; — used in Roman law as opposed to dative or testamentary.
op'to-cœle (ŏp'tō-sēl), op'to-cœ'li-a (-sē'lĭ-ȧ), n. [NL. optocoelia; Gr. ὀπτικός optic + κοῖλος a hollow.] Zoöl. The cavity in the optic lobes of the brain in many animals. B. G. Wilder.
op'to-my-om'e-ter (ŏp'tō-mī-ŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [opto- + myo- + -meter.] Med. An instrument for measuring the strength of the ocular muscles.
op'to-type, n. [opto- + type.] A test type for the eye.

op'u-lence (ŏp'ū-lĕns), n. [L. opulentia: cf. F. opulence. See OPULENT.] Wealth; riches; affluence. Swift.

op'u-lent (-lĕnt), a. [L. opulens, opulentus, fr. ops, opis, power, wealth, riches; akin to Skr. apnas possessions: cf. F. opulent. Cf. COPIOUS.] Having a large estate or property; wealthy; rich; affluent; hence, luxuriant, profuse, etc.; as, an opulent city; an opulent citizen; opulent blossoms. — op'u-lent-ly, adv.

Syn. — See RICH.

Opuntia (O. tuna).

O-pun'ti-a (ō-pŭn'shĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.] Bot. A very large and characteristic genus of cactaceous plants, the prickly pears, having flat or terete joints usually studded with tubercles bearing sharp spines or prickly hairs or both. The flowers are mostly yellow, and often ornamental; they are succeeded by edible pulpy fruits, which in some species furnish an article of native diet and are also used to make fermented beverages. The tuna (O. tuna) and the Indian fig (O. ficus-indica) are often planted for hedges. Some species are of value as forage plants in arid regions. Though indigenous in America, the genus is represented in most tropical and warm regions by naturalized forms. Also [l. c.], a plant of this genus.

‖ o'pus (ō'pŭs), n.; pl. OPERA (ŏp'ĕ-rȧ). [L. See OPERA.] A work; work; specif.: a Music. A composition, or set of compositions, usually numbered in the order of its issue. b Embroidery. With qualifying adjective: Any of various kinds of old needlework, as: o'pus An'gli-cum (ăn'glĭ-kŭm) or An'gli-ca'num (-kā'nŭm) [LL. Anglicanum English], (early) English work, also, embroidery closely imitating the freedom of painting in form; o. a-ra'ne-um (ȧ-rā'nē-ŭm) [L. aranearum, neut. of araneus of a spider], embroidery in which long, straight lines form the pattern, as in the spider web; in the Middle Ages, embroidery in general; o. con-su'tum (kŏn-sū'tŭm) [L. consutum, neut. of consutus sewed], cutwork or appliqué; o. pec-ti'ne-um (pĕk-tĭn'ē-ŭm) [LL. pectineum, neut. a., fr. or (ôr), prep., conj., & adv. [From Scand.; cf. Icel. ār, adv., early, formerly; but influenced by the kindred compar. AS. ǣr before. See ERE, prep. & adv.] 1. Ere; before; sooner than. Obs. or Archaic.

But natheless, while I have time and space,
Or that I forther in this tale pace. Chaucer.

2. Than. Obs., or Scot. & Dial. Eng.

or over, or ere, before; — ever being generally simply emphatic, with the force of even, at all. Archaic.

Would I had met my dearest foe in heaven

or, conj. [ME. or, fr. outher, other, auther, either, or, AS. āwðer, contr. fr. āhwæðer; ā aye + hwæðer whether (see AYE, WHETHER; cf. EITHER); or ME. other, oðer, or, may be fr. AS. oððe, akin to OHG. odar, odo, eddo, G. oder, Goth. aiþþau (Oxf. E. D.); the r perh. due to the influence of a preceding word other or outher = either.] A coördinating particle that marks an alternative; as, you may read or may write, — that is, you may do one of the things at your pleasure, but not both. It often connects a series of words or propositions, presenting a choice of either; as, he may study law or medicine or he may go into trade.

Or, Her.

or, n. [F., fr. L. aurum gold. Cf. AURE-ATE.] Her. Yellow or gold color, — represented in drawing or engraving by small dots.

-or. [L. -or: cf. OF. -or, -our, -eur, F. -eur.] 1. A noun suffix denoting an act, or a state or quality; as in error, fervor, pallor, candor, etc.

2. A noun suffix denoting an agent or doer; as in auditor, one who hears; donor, one who gives; obligor, elevator. It is correlative to -ee. In general -or is appended to words of Latin, and -er to those of English, origin. See -ER.

3. An ending of indeterminate meaning, representing a French -oir; as in manor, mirror.

o'ra (ō'rȧ; 201), n.; pl. -RAS (-rȧz). [AS., prob. of Scand. origin.] A money of account introduced into England by the Danish invaders and valued in 920 at 2½ shillings, in the Domesday Book (1086) at 20*d.* sterling.

or'ach } (ŏr'ăch), n. [F. arroche, corrupt. fr. L. atri- or'ache } plex, Gr. ἀτράφαξυς.] Any plant of the genus Atriplex, esp. A. hortensis.

or'a-cle (ŏr'ȧ-k'l), n. [L. oraculum, fr. orare to speak, utter, pray: cf. F. oracle.] 1. Class. Antiq. The medium by which a god reveals hidden knowledge or makes known the divine purpose; also, the place where the oracle is given.

2. The revelation or utterance supposed to issue from a divinity through a medium, usually a priest or priestess thought to be inspired; the response of an oracle to a question or petition. The utterances of the ancient oracles were commonly obscure and enigmatical. See DIVINATION; cf. DELPHIAN, DODONA.

3. Transferred: a A place or medium of communication from the God of Judaism and Christianity, as the holy of holies of the Jewish temple, the breastplate (with the Urim and Thummim) of the high priest, or an inspired prophet or teacher. b The revelation or message received from such a medium; specif., pl., the Scriptures. c A command of the Pope. Obs.

4. A thing or person supposed to give oracular knowledge or decisions.

The country rectors . . . thought him an oracle on points of learning. Macaulay.

Into the world to teach his final will. Milton.

5. An authoritative or wise expression; a wise answer, or one delivered with aspect of oracular certainty.

o-rac'u-lar (ō-răk'ū-lăr), a. [Cf. L. oracularius.] 1. Of or pertaining to an oracle; uttering oracles; forecasting the future; as, an oracular tongue.

2. Resembling an oracle in some way, as in solemnity, wisdom, authority, obscurity, ambiguity, dogmatism.

They have something venerable and oracular in that unadorned gravity and shortness in the expression. Pope.

o'ral (ō'răl), a. [L. os, oris, the mouth, akin to Skr. ās. Cf. ORISON, USHER.] 1. Uttered by the mouth, or in words; spoken, not written; as, oral traditions; oral testimony.

2. Using speech or the lips; as, an oral teacher.

3. Of or pertaining to the mouth; surrounding or lining the mouth; as, oral cilia or cirri.

4. Zoöl. Designating the side on which the mouth is situated; on, or pertaining to, the same side as the mouth; actinal; — opposed to aboral.

Syn. — ORAL, VERBAL are often used as equivalent terms. But ORAL applies only to that which is spoken by word of mouth, and emphasizes the idea of utterance; as, oral tradition, oral confession, oral pleading, an oral examination; "I want to read these plays once with some very accurate guide, oral or printed" (E. FitzGerald). VERBAL strictly applies to that which is communicated in words, whether spoken or written, or to that which has to do with words in contradistinction to ideas; the term is employed esp. of transactions which are not committed to writing; as, a verbal message, a verbal contract; verbal criticism; "He often loses himself in little trifling distinctions and verbal niceties" (T. Gray); "From the deficiency of verbal memory he [Gray] seldom quoted" (N. Nicholls); "Youmans's version, . . . which was purely from hearsay, could make no pretension to verbal accuracy" (J. Fiske).

or'ange (ŏr'ĕnj; -ĭnj), n. [F.; cf. It. arancia, arancio, LL. arangia, Sp. naranja, Pg. laranja; all fr. Ar. nārany, Per. nārang; cf. Skr. nāranga orange tree. The o- in F. orange is due to confusion with or gold, L. aurum, because the orange resembles gold in color.] 1. The large globose fruit of the rutaceous tree Citrus aurantium. Botanically the orange is a berry consisting of ten or more separable pulpy carpels, each containing several seeds and numerous juicy cells, the exocarp being a yellow or reddish yellow leathery rind containing many oil glands. There are three principal subspecies of the orange, distinguished by shape, color, thickness of rind, and degree of acidity of pulp: (1) The sweet, or common, orange (C. aurantium sinensis). (2) The bitter, or Seville, orange (C. aurantium bigaradia). (3) The bergamot orange (C. aurantium bergamia). Numerous varieties, as the navel and blood oranges, exist in cultivation, also hybrids between the sweet orange and other species of Citrus. The aromatic peel is used in confectionery and preserves.

Or'ange, n. A town and a former small principality now in the department of Vaucluse, France. In 1530 it became a possession of the house of Nassau, whence it passed to a house of princes, who were styled princes of Orange-Nassau, and of whom William, afterward William III. of England, was one. The territory was acquired by Louis XIV. and annexed to France, but the title continued to be held by the cousin of William and his descendants, who now are the royal line of the Netherlands. From the coincidence of the name with that of the fruit and the color, the wearing of orange ribbons, etc., became an emblem of attachment to William III. and the settlement of the crown as determined at the revolution of 1688–89, and hence became a practice of the Orangemen.

or-bic'u-lar (ôr-bĭk'ū-lẽr), a. [L. orbicularis, fr. orbiculus dim. of orbis orb : cf. F. orbiculaire.] 1. Resembling, or having the form of, an orb ; spherical ; circular ; orbiculate. "Orbicular as the disk of a planet." De Quincey. 2. Petrog. Containing rounded bodies, or orbs, consisting of minerals in generally radial groupings, usually in successive concentric zones, as corsite, orbicular granite, etc. — or-bic'u-lar'i-ty (-lăr'ĭ-tĭ), or-bic'u-lar-ness, n. — or-bic'u-lar-ly, adv.

orbicular bone. Anat. See LENTICULAR PROCESS. — o. ligament, Anat., a strong band of fibers which surrounds the head of the radius and retains it in firm connection with the lesser sigmoid cavity of the ulna.

or-bic'u-late (ôr-bĭk'ū-lāt) } a. [L. orbiculatus. See OR-or-bic'u-lat'ed (-lāt'ĕd) } BICULAR.] Having the form of an orb ; circular, or nearly circular, in outline ; as, an orbiculate leaf.

Orbiculate Leaf.

or-bic'u-late (-lāt), n. That which is orbiculate ; esp., a solid of oval vertical section and circular horizontal section.

or-bic'u-la'tion (-lā'shŭn), n. State or fact of being or becoming orbiculate. Dr. H. More.

Or-bil'i-us (ôr-bĭl'ĭ-ŭs), n. The schoolmaster (Orbilius Pupillus) of the Roman poet Horace, who describes him as "fond of flogging" (plagosus) ; — often used as the type of any such teacher.

or'bit (ôr'bĭt), n. [L. orbita a track or rut made by a wheel, course, circuit, fr. orbis a circle : cf. F. orbite.] 1. Anat. The cavity of the skull in which the eye and its appendages are located ; the eye socket. In man each orbit is a somewhat pyramidal cavity, the frontal sphenoid, ethmoid, superior maxillary, malar, lachrymal, and palatine bones entering into the formation of its walls. The optic foramen for the optic nerve is at the apex of the cavity, and eight other openings give passage to nerves, blood vessels, and the nasal duct. It contains a quantity of fatty tissue which helps to form a cushion for the eyeball. 2. Zoöl. a The skin around the eye of a bird. b The depression in the front of the carapace of a crustacean in which the eyestalk is situated. c A raised, or otherwise marked, area around the compound eye of an insect. 3. An orb or ball. Rare & Improper.

Roll the lucid orbit of an eye. Young.

4. Astron. The path described by a heavenly body in its revolution around another body ; as, the orbit of Jupiter, of the earth, of the moon, or of a comet. 5. Law. Of a right, the sum, or extent, of the advantages conferred by its enjoyment. Rare.

or'bit-al (ôr'bĭ-tăl), a. Of or pertaining to an orbit ; as, orbital revolution ; orbital arch.

volutions. Anat. See ORBITAL LOBE a. — orbital fossa. Zoöl. = ORBIT, 2 b. — o. index, Craniom., the ratio of the length of the orbital cavity (measured from the dacryon to the farthest opposite border) to its greatest height (which is determined by a line at right angles with the preceding), usually expressed in hundredths of the length. Skulls having an orbital index of 83 (or sometimes 84) to 89 are called mesoseme; those having an index below 83 (or 84), microseme; and those having an index of 90 or more, megaseme. See CRANIOMETRY. — o. lobe. a Anat. The portion of the lower surface of the frontal lobe of the brain which overlies the orbits. It is divided by a branched sulcus (the orbital sulcus) into the internal, anterior, and posterior, orbital convolutions, which are the continuations respectively of the superior, middle, and inferior frontal convolutions. b Zoöl. The anterior lateral part of the carapace of a crab. — o. nerve, Anat., the temporomalar nerve. — o. point, Craniom., the lowest point of the lower border of the orbit. See CRANIOMETRY, Illust. — o. sulcus. Anat. See ORBITAL LOBE a.

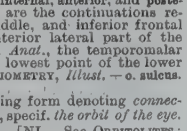
or'bi-to- (ôr'bĭ-tō-). A combining form denoting connection with, relation to, an orbit, specif. the orbit of the eye.

Or'bi-to-li'na (ôr'bĭ-tō-lī'nä), n. [NL. See ORBITOLITES; 2d -INA.] Paleon. A genus of Foraminifera very abundant in the Cretaceous, having a bowl-shaped or depressed conic siliceous test with agglutinated sandy particles.

Or'bi-to-li'tes (-lī'tēz), n. [NL. See ORBIT; -LITE.] Zoöl. A genus of Foraminifera, with both fossil and living species which form broad, thin, circular disks, containing numerous small chambers disposed concentrically about a few spirally wound primordial chambers.



Orbitolites, with part of the surface cut away to show the internal structure.

or'bi-to-na'sal (-nā'zăl), a. [orbito- + nasal.] Craniol. Of or pertaining to the orbital and nasal portions of the skull. — orbitonasal index, a ratio denoting the relative projection of the root of the nose beyond the plane of the eye orbits. The sum of two lines each extending from the front point of the outer edge of one of the orbits to the lowest point on the root of the nose, divided into the direct distance (multiplied by 100) between the two orbital points found, gives the index. Subjects having indices of from 110 to 112.9 (or sometimes of 107.5 to 110) are called mesopic; below 110 (or 107.5), platyopic; above 113 (or 110), proopic. See CRANIOMETRY.

or'bi-to-sphe'noid (-sfē'noid), a. [orbito- + sphenoid.] Anat. & Zoöl. Designating, or pertaining to, a paired element of the skull situated between the presphenoid and frontal. In man it forms the lesser wing of the sphenoid. — n. An orbitosphenoid bone or process.

Or'bu-li'na (ôr'bû-lī'nä), n. [NL., dim. of L. orbis orb.] Zoöl. A genus of minute Foraminifera having a globular unilocular shell.

Orbulina (O. universa).

orb'y (ôr'bĭ), a. [From 2d ORB.] Orblike; having the course of an orb; revolving. "Orby hours." Chapman.

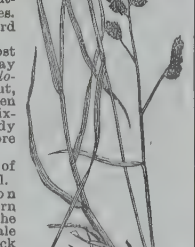
or'ce-in (ôr'sē-ĭn), n. [See ORCIN.] Chem. A red nitrogenous dyestuff got from orcin by action of aqueous ammonia and atmospheric oxygen. It is the essential coloring matter of cudbear and archil, and is closely related to litmus.

or'chard (ôr'chĕrd), n. [AS. orceard, ortgeard; cf. Goth. aúrtigards; prob. fr. L. hortus garden + AS. geard yard. See YARD inclosure.] 1. A garden. Obs. 2. A plantation of fruit trees; an inclosure containing fruit trees; also, the trees, collectively; — used esp. of apples, peaches, pears, cherries, plums, or the like, less often of nut-bearing trees or of sugar maples. In orchard, planted with orchard trees.



Orchard Grass.

orchard grass. One of the most valuable and widely grown hay and pasture grasses (Dactylis glomerata). It is tall and stout, growing in tufts with loose open panicles. It is often used in mixtures of lawn grass for shady places. In Great Britain more often called cocksfoot.

or'chard-ing, n. Cultivation of orchards; orchards, in general.

orchard oriole. A common oriole (Icterus spurius) of eastern North America, smaller than the Baltimore oriole. The adult male is rich chestnut with a black head, neck, and upper back.

or-che'sis (ôr-kē'sĭs), n. [Gr. ὄρχησις. See ORCHESTRA.] Art of dancing, esp. in the Greek chorus Or'ches-ti'i-dæ (ôr'kĕs-tĭ'ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gr. ὀρχηστής a dancer. See ORCHESTRA.] Zoöl. The family containing the beach fleas. Or-ches'ti-an (ôr-kĕs'tĭ-ăn), n. — or-ches'ti-id (-ĭd), n.

or'ches-tra (ôr'kĕs-trä; formerly often, still occas., ôr-kĕs'trä), n. [L. orchestra, Gr. ὀρχήστρα, orig., the place for the chorus of dancers, fr. ὀρχεῖσθαι to dance.] 1. Class. Antiq. In ancient Greek theaters, the circular space used by the chorus, in front of the proscenium. In Roman theaters it was a corresponding semicircular space used for the seats of persons of distinction.

2. Dancing. Obs.

3. In a modern theater or other public hall, the space used by a band of instrumental performers, commonly just in front of the stage, and at or below the level of the auditorium floor. By extension, the forward part, sometimes all, of the main floor in a theater. Cf. STALL, n., in a theater.

4. Music. A band of performers on various instruments, including esp. those of the viol class, adapted for rendering the larger kinds of concerted music, as symphonies, overtures, etc., and the accompaniments of operas, oratorios, masses, and the like, or for playing the slighter concerted music for theatrical performances, dances, etc.; — commonly distinguished from the military or street band of players on wind instruments, and from a group of solo players for rendering chamber music, as septets, octets, etc. The modern concert orchestra is composed of four important groups of instruments, the three "bands:" (1) strings — first and second violins, violas, violoncellos, and contrabasses — the largest and predominant group, sometimes used alone as a string orchestra; (2) wood-wind — flutes, oboes, bassoons, and clarinets; (3) brass — horns, trumpets, trombones; and the "battery" or (4) percussives — tympani, cymbals, triangle, etc. Other instruments, as the harp, are introduced for special effects. Each of the three bands and some of their subgroups can play full harmony by themselves, but the surpassing power and expressiveness of the orchestra lies in the possibility of combining members of different groups, each contributing its appropriate timbre to the rich total effect. See ORCHESTRATION.

or-ches'tral (ôr-kĕs'trăl; ôr'kĕs-trăl; 277), a. Of or pertaining to an orchestra; suitable for, or performed in or by, an orchestra. — or-ches'tral-ly, adv.

or'ches-trate (ôr'kĕs-trāt), v. t. & i.; ORCHES-TRA'TED (-trāt'ĕd); ORCHES-TRA'TING (-trāt'ĭng). To compose or arrange (music) for an orchestra or'ches-tra'tion (-trā'shŭn), n. Music. The arrangement of music for an orchestra; orchestral treatment of a composition; instrumentation. The science of orchestration treats of the structure, manipulation, compass, and timbre of the orchestral instruments, their effective combination, and the writing of orchestral score. The essentials of good orchestration are: proper distribution of the harmony to secure the prominence of leading parts, and balance of tone; contrast, as between the different divisions of instruments; variety, as by mixing "tints" or timbres from the different groups; and appropriateness of timbre to the sentiment. Called also instrumentation.

or-ches'tric (ôr-kĕs'trĭk), a. Orchestral.

or'chid (ôr'kĭd), n. [L. orchis, wrongly inflected orchidis, etc. See ORCHIS.] Any plant of the family Orchidaceæ.

Or'chi-da'ce-æ (ôr'kĭ-dā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A large family of perennial epiphytic or terrestrial plants, the orchid family, considered the most highly developed of the monocotyledons. They have entire sheathing leaves, sometimes reduced to scales, and usually showy flowers of remarkable structure; the calyx consists of three often petaloid sepals, the corolla of three petals, one of which (the labellum or lip) differs greatly from the others and is often spurred, and the fertile stamen is variously united with the gynœcium into a column, and the pollen is coherent in waxy or powdery masses (pollinia) attached at the base to a viscid gland which adheres to the bodies of visiting insects. The family is noted for the wide variety of its adaptations to cross-pollination. The ovary is completely inferior, and the numerous minute seeds are without endosperm, but contain chlorophyll to aid in the development of the embryo. There are about 415 genera and 5,000 species of orchids, most abundant in the tropics. Those of temperate regions are mainly terrestrial, with less conspicuous flowers; a large number of the tropical epiphytes are cultivated in glasshouses. Among the more important and familiar genera are Cypripedium, Blephariglottis, Dendrobium, Cattleya, Oncidium, Odontoglossum, etc. Vanilla and Orchis are the only genera of economic interest. — or'chi-da'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Or'chi-da'les (-lēz), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. a A Lindleyan alliance including the orchids. b An order of monocotyledonous plants embracing the Orchidaceæ and Burmanniaceæ. They are characterized by the irregular flowers, inferior compound ovary, and minute exendospermous seeds.

2. According to medieval angelology, any of the nine grades of angels; also, any similar class of beings.

3. Eccl. a Any of the several grades or ranks of the Christian ministry. The eight orders of the Roman Catholic Church are those of bishop, priest, deacon, and subdeacon, called the major, greater, holy, or sacred, orders, and those of acolyte, exorcist, lector or reader, and doorkeeper, called the minor orders. Some authorities reckon the orders as seven, not regarding bishop as a distinct order from priest. The three orders, or holy orders, of the churches of the Anglican Communion are bishop, priest, and deacon. The orders, or holy orders, commonly recognized in the Eastern Church are: major orders, bishop, priest, and deacon; minor orders, subdeacon and anagnost or reader, sometimes also, singer. b The office, position, or status of a person in the Christian ministry; — now usually in the pl. and often with the epithet holy; as, the order of priesthood; to take orders, or holy orders, i. e., to enter the Christian ministry; in orders. c The conferment of such office; ordination, which in the Roman Catholic Church, in the Eastern Church, and by some in churches of the Anglican Communion is held to be a sacrament conferring special grace and as such administrable only by bishops; — usually in pl. and often with the epithet holy.

4. A rank or class in society; a group or division of men in the same social position; a specific rank in the state; also, a group of persons who, by reason of profession, special interests, or the like, are regarded as a distinct class; as, the higher and lower orders of society; the order of baronets; the military order.

5. Arch. a A style of building. b Classical Arch. A type of column and entablature, viewed, with its forms, proportions, and mode of decoration, as the unit of a style. The Greeks used three orders, the Doric, Ionic, and Corinthian. Of these the oldest and the simplest in outline is the Doric, having its column shaft slightly convex, fluted with about twenty channelings of nearly semielliptical section and separated by sharp arrises; having no base, and a capital with the echinus — of a peculiar eccentric curve in profile — supporting a square unmolded abacus, and separated from the shaft by one or more annulets. The Doric style was prevalent in Greek temples, and in those of the Periclean age shows a remarkable blending of solidity with refinement of lines and proportions. The Ionic order has paired spiral volutes on the front and rear of its capital, with the spiral fillets continued across the face under the abacus, and the volutes united at the sides by scrolls. Its columns are generally about nine diameters high, with 24 flutings separated by fillets; they rest on bases of various styles, esp. the Attic. Its entablature has the architrave, typically in three bands, separated by a rich molding from the sculptured frieze. The Corinthian is the most ornate of the orders. Except for the capital, it is similar to the Ionic. Its capital is bell-shaped, and in typical examples is enveloped with rows of acanthus leaves, with volutes under the projecting angles of its abacus, and helices under the anthemion or other ornament at the concaved middle of the abacus. The shaft is typically fluted like the Ionic, and rests on the Attic base. The Corinthian was the latest of the Greek orders to come into favor. Its richly decorative character led to its wide use by the Romans, and by the architects of the Renaissance. To the Greek orders the Romans added the Tuscan, a crude Doric with unfluted columns on bases, few and bold moldings, and general lack of ornament; and the Composite, a modified Corinthian, having the capital commonly with eight volutes, adopted (with ovolo between each pair) from the Ionic and grafted on the Corinthian bell. They used the Doric and Ionic in modified forms, lacking the refinement of the Greek. Renaissance writers on architecture recognized five orders as orthodox or classical, the (Roman) Doric, the Ionic, Tuscan, Corinthian, and Composite. See Illust. below. c A system of intercolumniation (which see). Obs.

6. Math. a Degree; thus, the order of a curve or surface is the same as the degree of its equation. b Of a differential equation, its highest index of derivation.

7. Biol. A category of classification ranking above the family and below the class. In botany, order or natural order was formerly exclusively applied to the category now more appropriately called family. The suffix denoting the latter is -aceæ, while the order of modern taxonomists has the suffix -ales. Thus the order Rosales is made up of the Rosaceæ (rose family), Fabaceæ (bean family), Cæsalpiniaceæ (cassia family), Mimosaceæ (mimosa family), etc. Order and family are still used interchangeably by some botanists. In zoölogy no distinctive suffix for names of orders has been adopted.

8. See PETROGRAPHY.

9. Regular arrangement; any methodical or established succession or harmonious relation; method; system; as: of material things, like the books in a library; of intel-

Important geographic changes, such as the emergence of great areas of land in North America, marked the close of the period. Trilobites, crystoïds, and graptolites reached their climaxes; cephalopods, brachiopods, and bryozoans became abundant. The earliest known vertebrate (fish) remains occur in rocks of this system. Cryptogamic plants almost certainly flourished. The Ordovician strata contain important deposits of oil and gas in Ohio and eastern Indiana, and of lead and zinc ores in the upper Mississippi basin, and of lead in southeastern Missouri.

or'dur-ous (-ŭs), a. Of or pertaining to ordure; filthy.

ö're (û'rĕ), n. sing. & pl. [Dan., Sw., & Norw.] A bronze coin and money of account of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, being $\frac{1}{100}$ part of a krone and worth about $\frac{1}{4}$ of a cent. See COIN.

ore (ôr; 201), n. [AS. ōra (of uncert. origin), confused in E. with the unrelated ār brass, bronze, which is akin to OHG. ēr, G. ehern brazen, Icel. eir brass, Goth. ais, L. aes, Skr. ayas iron. Cf. ERA.] 1. a A native compound containing one or more metals; sometimes, also, a native metal or even a valuable native nonmetal, as sulphur. b Mining. Any material containing valuable metallic constituents for the sake of which it is mined and worked; as, cinnabar is an ore of mercury; gold-bearing quartz is a gold ore; also, material mined and worked for nonmetals; as, pyrites is a sulphur ore. The term ore has usually been applied, among miners, to the crude material obtained without other than hand sorting of the lumps; but where mechanical concentration is practiced at the mine the concentrates are often called ore. Waste may of course contain valuable constituents and may, owing to improved processes, itself become ore.

2. Metal, esp. precious; as, the liquid ore. Rare. Milton.

3. Metal. A soft compact variety of hematite used for the bottoms of puddling furnaces.

ore in sight, Mining, the amount of ore in a mine which is so far exposed by existing developments as to make its availability and value reasonably certain. Mining engineers do not, as a rule, estimate as "in sight" any body of ore not exposed on three sides or edges by shafts and levels at intervals so small as to make intervening changes of character and value highly improbable.

o're-ad (ōʹrē-ăd; 201), n. [L. Oreas, -adis, Gr. Ὀρειάς, -άδος, fr. ὄρος mountain.] Class. Myth. One of the nymphs of mountains and hills.

Like a wood nymph light,

ore chute or shoot. Mining. A body of ore, usually of elongated form, occurring in a larger vein or ore deposit and bordered by comparatively valueless vein material.

o-rec'tic (ō-rĕk'tĭk), a. [Gr. ὀρεκτικός, fr. ὀρέγειν to reach after.] Philos. Of or pertaining to the desires; hence, impelling to gratification; appetent.

Or'e-gon (ôr'ē-gŏn), n. A State of the United States. — Oregon bearwood, the cascara buckthorn. — O. cedar, a tall pinaceous timber tree of the western United States (Chamæcyparis lawsoniana); also, its heavy wood, which is harder than white cedar. — O. charr, the Dolly Varden trout. — O. fir, the Douglas spruce. — O. grape, an evergreen barberry (Berberis aquifolium) of Oregon and California, or its small blue-black berry. — O. maple, the broad-leaved maple (Acer macrophyllum). — O. oak, an oak of Washington and Oregon (Quercus garryana) with light gray bark and obovate, pinnatifid leaves; also, its valuable hard wood, which constitutes the best oak timber of the Pacific coast. — O. pine, the Douglas spruce. — O. Question. Amer. Hist. See NORTHWEST BOUNDARY DISPUTE. — O. robin, the varied thrush. California. — O. sturgeon, the white sturgeon (Acipenser transmontanus).

o-rel'lin (ō-rĕl'ĭn), n. [From NL. orellana, a specific name of annatto, alluding to the fact that the Amazon (on the banks of which annatto is common) was discovered by Francisco Orellana.] Chem. A yellow substance obtained from the seeds of annatto (Bixa orellana). Cf. BIXIN.

o-ren'dite (ō-rĕn'dit), n. [From Orenda Butte, Wyoming.] Petrog. A peculiar lava consisting mostly of orthoclase and leucite with some diopside and phlogopite.

oreo-. Combining form from Greek ὄρος, ὄρεος, mountain.

O're-o-pha'sis (ōʹrē-ō-fāʹsĭs; 201), n. [NL.; oreo- + Gr. Φᾶσις, the river Phasis, for φασιανός pheasant (bird of Phasis).] Zoöl. A genus of curassows containing one large species (O. derbianus), called mountain curassow, of high mountains in Guatemala. It is greenish black with white under parts, a white tail band, red feet, and a red casque on the head. It is the type of a subfamily, O're-o-pha-si'næ (-fā-sīʹnē). — o're-o-pha'sine (-fāʹsĭn; -sēn; 183), a.

O're-or'tyx (ōʹrē-ôrʹtĭks), n. [NL.; oreo- + Gr. ὄρτυξ a quail.] Zoöl. The genus constituted by the mountain quail of the western United States. See MOUNTAIN QUAIL.

ore'shoot' (ōrʹshōōtʹ; 201), n. A body of ore, usually of elongated form, extending downward in a vein.

O'res-te'an (ōʹrĕs-tēʹăn), a. [L. Oresteus, Gr. Ὀρέστειος.] Of or pertaining to, or typified by, Orestes.

O'res-te'ia (ōʹrĕs-tēʹyă; -tĭʹă), n. [Gr. Ὀρέστεια.] A poem narrating the history of Orestes; esp., the dramatic trilogy written by Æschylus. The first of the Æschylean dramas is "Agamemnon." It depicts the return of Agamemnon from Troy and his murder by Clytemnestra with the connivance of Ægisthus. The opening chorus sketches the bloody history of the house of Atreus and narrates the sacrifice of Iphigenia, which Clytemnestra makes the justification of her act, while Cassandra, brought captive from Troy, before she, too, is slain by Clytemnestra, prophesies the vengeance of Orestes, who is in Phocis. (See AGAMEMNON, CLYTEMNESTRA, IPHIGENIA, 1.) The "Choephoræ" depicts the return of Orestes, his encounter with Electra, with whom he plots the death of Clytemnestra and Ægisthus, both of whom he slays. The play ends with his being driven forth, maddened, by the Erinyes, aroused to vengeance by his matricide (see ELECTRA, ORESTES). The "Eumenides" depicts Orestes's trial at the Areopagus, his purification by Apollo, and the conversion of the Erinyes into the Eumenides. (See AREOPAGUS, EUMENIDES.)

O-res'tes (ō-rĕsʹtēz), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ὀρέστης; cf. ὄρος mountain.] 1. Lit., a mountaineer; — masc. prop. name.

2. Gr. Myth. A son of Agamemnon and Clytemnestra, who avenges his father's murder by slaying his mother and Ægisthus. He is reared in Phocis, where (Sophocles states) his sister Electra (which see) has sent him to escape Clytemnestra. Returning in disguise at the command of Apollo, he executes his vengeance. Subsequently (as related by Æschylus) he is driven forth by the Erinyes and pursued until eventually purified at the Areopagus (see ORESTEIA). In another version (treated by Euripides), at the command of Apollo he seeks purification by going to Tauris, whence he brings back his sister Iphigenia (which see) and the cult of the Tauric Artemis. See HERMIONE, 1.

o-rex'ine (-sĭn; -sēn; 184) } Pharm. A complex derivative of quinoline, $C_{17}H_{13}N_2Cl$, forming colorless, odorless, lustrous crystals with a bitter, pungent taste. It is of some repute as a stomachic.

or'gan (ôr'găn), n. [AS. organe, organon, a musical instrument, L. organum, also, an implement, instrument, Gr. ὄργανον; akin to ἔργον work, and E. work: cf. OF. orguene, F. orgue, the musical instrument, F. organe, in other senses. See WORK; cf. ORGUE.] 1. Music. a One of various instruments, esp. of wind; — used chiefly in Scriptural passages or allusions. Obs. or Hist.

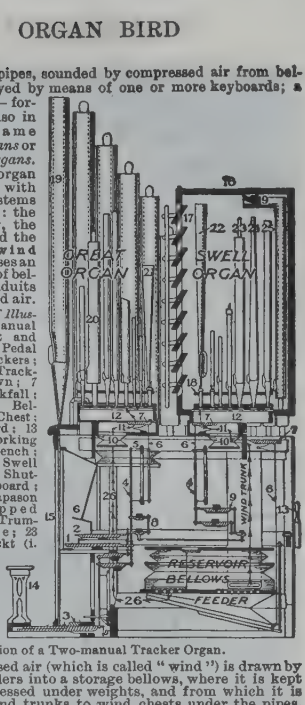
Jubal . . . the father of all such as handle the harp and organ. Gen. iv. 21.

b Specif.: A wind instrument, in its complete modern form the largest, most powerful, and most varied in resources of musical instruments, consisting of from one to many sets of pipes, sounded by compressed air from bellows, and played by means of one or more keyboards; a pipe organ; — formerly used also in pl. in the same sense; as, organs or a pair of organs. The modern organ is constructed with three chief systems of mechanism: the wind supply, the pipe work, and the action. The wind supply comprises an arrangement of bellows and conduits for compressed air.



Section of a Two-manual Tracker Organ.

Description of Illustration: 1, 2 Manual Keys of Great and Swell Organ; 3 Pedal Keys; 4, 8 Stickers; 5 Roller and Tracker; 6 Pulldown; 7 Pallet; 9 Backfall; 10 Concussion Bellows; 11 Wind Chest; 12 Sound Board; 13 Handle for working Feeder; 14 Bench; 15 Casing; 16 Swell Box; 17 Swell Shutter; 18 Rackboard; 19 Open Diapason Pipe; 20 Stopped Diapason; 21 Trumpet; 22 Hautboy; 23 Lieblich Gedackt (i. e., "sweet-toned covered" pipe); 24 Gemshorn; 25 Principal; 26 Wind Trunk. Arrowheads show the course of the wind.

This compressed air (which is called "wind") is drawn by means of feeders into a storage bellows, where it is kept evenly compressed under weights, and from which it is carried by wind trunks to wind chests under the pipes. The pipe work comprises various sets of metal and wooden, flue and reed, pipes, differing in shape and size according to the quality and pitch of their tones, and arranged in stops or registers. Stops are generally set in groups upon single wind chests, each such group constituting, with its wind chest and keyboard, a partial organ, of which there are usually from two to five: the great, choir, echo or swell, solo, and pedal organs. See c following. The action comprises the successive banks of keys — the pedal and the manuals — together with the draw knob appliances for various stops and couplers, the combination pedals, swell pedal, etc., and the complicated series of stickers, backfalls, trackers, etc., connecting the keys with the pallets or valves, which, with the levers, rods, etc., between the stop knobs and wind chests, are often worked by electric or pneumatic action. The organ, in more or less developed form, has been in church use from the earliest Christian times, and is a valuable adjunct to choral music. Since the 16th century its elaborated orchestral qualities have brought it into independent concert use, with a considerable literature of its own.

A Simple Form of Organ Action. 1 Key; 2 Sticker; 3 Backfall; 4 Pulldown; 5 Wind Chest; 6 Pallet; 7 Sound Board; 8 Slider; 9 Pipes.

‖ or'do (ôr'dō), n.; pl. ORDINES (-dĭ-nēz). [L.] Order; hence [cap.], R. C. Ch., the Ordinal, or directory as to the Mass and office for each day of the year. Chiefly used in various Latin phrases: or'do ad nos, lit., order in respect to us, order from a human point of view. Also, and more usually, "in ordine ad (se) nos," meaning (a subject is studied, a thing is considered) "in (its) relation to (itself) us" or "in relation to our mental faculties." Thus spirit is more knowable than matter, in ordine ad se; but matter is more knowable than spirit, in ordine ad nos. — or'do ad u'ni-ver'sum, order from a universal point of view. — or'do cog-ni'ti-o'nis (kŏg-n ɪ sh'ĭ-ō'nĭs), order of cognition. — or'do cog'no-scen'di (kŏg'nō-sĕn'dī), order of knowing. — or'do es-sen'di, order of being. — or'do et con-nex'i-o i'de-a'rum i'dem est ac or'do et con-nex'i-o re'rum (ĭd'ē-ā'rŭm; 115), the order and connection of ideas is the same as the order and connection of things. — or'do ex'e-cu'ti-o'nis (ĕk'sē-kū'shĭ-ō'nĭs), order of execution; real order. — or'do fi-en'di, order of becoming. — or'do in-ten'ti-o'nis (ĭn-tĕn'shĭ-ō'nĭs), order of intention; ideal order. — or'do na-tu'ræ, order of nature; natural sequence.

2. Biol. A part or structure in an animal or plant adapted for the performance of some specific function or functions, as the heart, kidney, etc. In most organs of multicellular organisms some particular form of tissue, depending on the function of the organ, forms the essential and active part of the structure, while other tissues serve for its support, nutrition, control, etc. Groups of organs having a common function are known as systems.

3. An instrument or medium by which an important action is performed or end accomplished; as, legislatures, courts, taxgatherers, etc., are organs of government.

4. A component part performing an essential office in the working of any complex machine; as, the cylinder, valves, crank, etc., are organs of the steam engine.

5. Any piece of mechanism, esp. a firearm, more or less elaborate in construction. Obs.

6. An instrument, in various fig. senses, as: a A person or thing by means of which something is performed. Archaic. b A mental faculty regarded as an instrument of the mind or compared to an organ of the body; as, conscience is the organ which reveals the law. c A medium of communication between one person or body and another; as, the Secretary of State is the organ of communication between the government and a foreign power; a newspaper is the organ of its editor, or of a party, sect, etc.

or'gan of Bo'jan'us (bō-jā'nŭs; bō-yä'nōōs) [after L. H. Bojanus (1776–1827), German anatomist], Zoöl., one of a pair of nephridial excretory organs of lamellibranch mollusks, situated on each side of the body just below the pericardium. — o. of Cor'ti (kōr'tē) [after Corti (1729–1813), Italian anatomist], Anat., a complex epithelial structure in the cochlea, which in mammals is the chief if not the only part of the ear by which sound is directly perceived, being especially adapted for distinguishing differences in pitch. It rests on the internal surface of the basilar membrane, which forms the floor of the scala media (see COCHLEA, 3), and appears to the naked eye as a spiral ridge. It contains two spiral rows of minute rods (the rods of Corti) which incline toward each other and are in contact at one end so that they arch over a spiral passage, the tunnel of Corti. To the inner side of the rows of rods (nearest the axis of the cochlea) is a single row of columnar hair cells (see HAIR CELL), to the outer side are several rows. The bases of the hair cells are surrounded by arborizations derived from the ganglion cells of the ganglion spirale of the auditory nerve. — o. of Gi'ral'dès' (zhē'räl'dĕs') [after O. C. J. A. Giraldès (1808–75), French physician], Anat., the paradidymis. — o. of Jacobson. Zoöl. = JACOBSON'S ORGAN. — o. of Ro'senmül'ler (rō'zĕn-mül'ĕr) [after J. C. Rosenmüller (1771–1820), German anatomist], Anat., the epoöphoron. — organs of the lateral line. Zoöl. See LATERAL LINE.

or-gan'ic (ôr-găn'ĭk), a. [L. organicus, Gr. ὀργανικός; cf. F. organique.] 1. Acting as an instrument of nature or art to a certain destined function or end; instrumental. R.

> Those organic arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously. Milton.

2. Of or pertaining to an organ or a system of organs. Hence: Biol. a Consisting of, or containing, organs; as, the organic structure of animals and plants. b Produced by an organ or organs; as organic pleasure. Rare.

3. Biol. Pertaining to, or derived from, living organisms; exhibiting characters peculiar to living organisms; as, organic bodies, life, remains. Cf. INORGANIC, 1 a.

4. Pertaining to, or inherent in, a certain organization; depending upon the constitution or structure; not secondary or accidental. Specif.: a Philol. Belonging etymologically to the structure of a word. Cf. INORGANIC, a., 1 d. b Law. Designating, or pertaining to, the law or laws by virtue of which a government or organization exists as such; designating the laws incorporated or involved in the organization of a state, political organism, other organized association; fundamental. Organic in this sense is commonly used as essentially synonymous with constitutional, but it is sometimes used in a wider sense, esp. with reference to states having a written constitution.

> The organic law of a country is the place of a constitution as the fundamental law of the local government. 101 U. S. 133.
> In framing the laws which were to give shape to the new government the Assembly distinguished between those which were "constitutional" and subject to change only by special processes of amendment, and those which, though organic, were to be left subject to change by the ordinary processes of statutory enactment by the two houses of the legislature. Woodrow Wilson.

The term organic act is used to designate acts of Congress conferring powers of government upon the Territories. 138 U. S. 443.

5. Chem. Pert. to or designating a branch of chemistry treating in general of the compounds produced in plants and animals and of many other carbon compounds of artificial origin; — contrasted with inorganic. See CHEMISTRY, I.

6. Philos. Possessed of a complex structure comparable to that of living beings; possessed of a structure, or forming a totality, in which the relations of the parts involve relations to the whole, which itself is free or comparatively free from external relationship; forming a complex, self-determined unity. See ORGANISM, 3.

7. Music. a Organlike. b Of or pertaining to the medieval organum.

organic analysis, Chem., the analysis of organic compounds, concerned chiefly with the determination of carbon as carbon dioxide, hydrogen as water, nitrogen as free nitrogen, ammonia, or nitric oxide, and oxygen as the difference between the sum of the others and 100 per cent. — o. description of curves, Math., act of tracing curves on a plane with instruments. — o. disease, Med., a disease attended with morbid changes in the structure of the affected organs; — opp. to functional disease. — o. electricity. = ANIMAL ELECTRICITY. — o. geometry, the "Geometria Organica" of Maclaurin (1719), which treats higher curves as arising from simpler ones; also, modern synthetic geometry. — o. memory, the reappearance or recurrence of a state or action which has once affected the nervous system, whether or not accompanied by conscious memory. — o. selection, Biol., a theory or process by which some biologists explain the influence of acquired characters on evolution without admitting their inheritance. Acquired individual characters are considered to protect congenital variations while these are still too insufficiently developed to be perpetuated by natural selection. — o. sensation, Psychol., sensations arising from the state or activity of the bodily organs, such as muscular, alimentary, sexual, respiratory, circulatory, and static sensations. Cf. CŒNÆSTHESIS. — o. stricture, Med., a contraction of one of the natural passages of the body due to structural changes in its walls, as distinguished from a spasmodic stricture due to muscular contraction. — o. unity. See UNITY.

or-gan'ic (ôr-găn'ĭk), n. With Kant, that in which the parts are means and ends to one another and to the whole. Each part separately is mere mechanism; it is a true or significant machine only in relation to other parts, its full significance being determined by the complex whole which the interacting parts create, not as their sum, but as a construction differing in quality from each and all of them.

or-gan'i-cism (-sĭz'm), n. Med. The doctrine of the localization of disease which refers it always to a material lesion of an organ. — or-gan'i-cist (-sĭst), n.

Or′pheus (ôr′fūs; commonly ôr′fē-ŭs), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ὀρφεύς.] 1. Class. Myth. A Thracian poet and musician, whose lyre could charm beasts and make trees and rocks move. According to the prevailing legend, he was son of Apollo and the Muse Calliope. When his wife, Eurydice, died, he descended to Hades, and so pleased Pluto by his music that the god allowed him to lead her back to earth on the condition that he should not look behind him till he reached the upper world. But through the anxiety of love he broke the condition, and Eurydice, who was following him, vanished again among the shades. In his obstinate grief Orpheus withdrew to the wilds of the mountains Rhodope and Hæmus, where a troop of Thracian Bassarids (mænads) tore him limb from limb. His head was thrown into the river Hebrus, whence it was carried, still sweetly singing, to Lesbos, where it was buried. See ORPHIC.
2. Astron. Cygnus; — an occasional name.

Or′phic (ôr′fĭk), a. [L. Orphicus, Gr. Ὀρφικός.] 1. Designating, characteristic of, or pertaining to, Orpheus or the literature, rites, and doctrines ascribed to him.
2. [also l. c.] Hence: Mystic; esoteric in diction; oracular.
3. Like the music or song ascribed to Orpheus; entrancing.
Orphic hymns, mystical or liturgical poems composed by adherents of Orphism. Those extant are mostly addressed to Olympian deities, and of late date, about the 4th century A. D. — O. mysteries, the secret rites and doctrines of the adherents of the interpretation of Dionysiac worship ascribed to Orpheus as founder. The rites included ceremonies of great antiquity and probable savage origin, such as a sacramental feast of raw flesh, putatively the body of Dionysus under the form of Zagreus (which see); they also included the more civilized symbolism characteristic of the Eleusinian mysteries (which see). Their essential import was to teach that the initiate might by pure life and asceticism achieve that mystic identification with the divine nature which the Dionysiacs sought in orgiastic ecstasy. They also (possibly through Egyptian influence; cf. BOOK OF THE DEAD) purported to give instructions for conduct of the soul in the world below. Some of the formulæ are preserved in eight Orphic tablets, inscribed plates of gold found in the graves of believers, seven in Italy, one in Crete.

Or′phism (-fĭz′m), n. The religion of the Orphic mysteries.
Under the name of "Orphism" we class all those elements which are so signally absent in Homer. . . . Such are the sense of evil, the need for purification, the idea of a man-god incarnate and suffering, and, closely connected with these, the idea of man's immortality, of his ultimate escape from evil by renewed purgation in another world. J. E. Harrison.

or′phrey (ôr′frā; -frĭ), n. [OF. orfreis, F. orfroi, LL. aurifrigium; fr. L. aurum gold + Phrygius Phrygian. Cf. AURIPHRYGIATE.] 1. Elaborate embroidery, esp. of gold. Obs. or Hist.
2. A band, usually of rich embroidery, wholly or in part of gold, affixed to ecclesiastical vestments, and formerly to knights' robes. — or′phreyed (-frād; -frĭd), a.

or′pi-ment (ôr′pĭ-mĕnt), n. [F., fr. L. auripigmentum; aurum gold + pigmentum pigment. Cf. AUREATE, PIGMENT, ORPIN, ORPINE.] Arsenic trisulphide, As_2S_3, or yellow arsenic, occurring naturally as a yellow crystalline mineral and also produced artificially as a lemon-yellow amorphous powder; — formerly called auripigment. It is used as a pigment (see KING'S YELLOW), in pyrotechny, and in certain technical processes, as indigo printing.

or′pin (ôr′pĭn), n. [F., orpiment, also, the plant orpine. See ORPIMENT.] 1. Orpiment. Obs.
2. Bot. Var. of ORPINE.

or′pine (ôr′pĭn), n. [F. orpin a kind of stonecrop; — so called from the yellow blossoms of a common species (Sedum acre). See ORPIMENT.] A species of stonecrop (Sedum telephium) with fleshy leaves and pink or purple flowers. It is native in Europe, but is often cultivated and occasionally naturalized in the United States. Also called live-forever. It was formerly used as a vulnerary.

or′ris (-ĭs), n. [Prob. corrupt. fr. ireos iris. Cf. IREOS.] The Florentine iris (Iris florentina), or its fragrant rootstock.

or′ris (ŏr′ĭs), n. [Contr. fr. orfrays, or fr. arras.] 1. Gold or silver lace, or braid, in any of various patterns.
2. An upholstery gimp or galloon of any of various sorts.

orris pattern. A peculiar pattern in which gold or silver lace is worked; esp., one with edges ornamented with equidistant conical figures, with spots between them.

orris root. The fragrant rootstock of any of several European irises, esp. the Florentine iris, the German iris, and Iris pallida. It is used pulverized in perfumery and medicine, and is the principal ingredient of sachet powder.

Orr's white (ôrz). A white pigment consisting of an intimate mixture of zinc sulphide, barium sulphate, and zinc oxide. It has good body and does not blacken.

or′sel-late (ôr′sĕ-lāt), n. A salt or ester of orsellic acid.

or′sel-lin′ic (-lĭn′ĭk), a. [From F. orseille archil. See ARCHIL.] Chem. Designating, or pertaining to, a crystalline acid, $C_6H_2CH_3(OH)_2CO_2H$, found, chiefly in combination, in certain lichens. It is a dihydroxy toluic acid.

ort (ôrt), n.; pl. ORTS (ôrts). [Akin to LG. ort, ortels, remnants of food, refuse, OFries. ort, OD. oorete, ooraete; prob. from the same prefix as in E. *or*deal + a word akin to eat.] A morsel left at a meal; a fragment; refuse; — commonly in pl. Now Rare or Archaic. Milton.
Let him have time a beggar's orts to crave. Shak.

Or-tal′i-dæ (ŏr-tăl′ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gr. ὀρταλίς, -ίδος, young bird, young animal.] Zoöl. A family of acalyptrate Diptera. It comprises numerous robust flies with usually spotted or banded wings and frequently with metallic colors, whose larvæ feed on decaying vegetable matter. The typical genus is Or′ta-lis (ôr′tȧ-lĭs). — or-tal′id (ŏr-tăl′ĭd; ôr′tȧ-lĭd), a. & n. — or′ta-lid′i-an (ôr′tȧ-lĭd′ĭ-ăn), n.

Or′ta-lis (ôr′tȧ-lĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ὀρταλίς young bird.] Zoöl. A genus of guans including the Texan chachalaca and numerous Central and South American species.

or′thi-an (ôr′thĭ-ăn), a. [Gr. ὄρθιος steep, high-pitched, fr. ὀρθός straight.] Anc. Gr. Music. Designating a style of singing, or a tune, characterized by high pitch.

Or′this (ôr′thĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ὀρθός straight.] Paleon. An extinct genus of articulate Brachiopoda, abundant in the Paleozoic. It is the type of a family, Or′thi-dæ (ôr′thĭ-dē). — or′thid (-thĭd), n.

Orthis (O. — subgenus Platystrophia — lynx). (½)

or′tho- (ôr′thō-). [Gr. ὀρθός straight; akin to Skr. ūrdhva upright, vṛdh to grow, to cause to grow.] 1. A combining form signifying straight, right, upright, correct, regular; as, *ortho*dromy, *ortho*diagonal, *ortho*dox, *ortho*graphic.
2. Chem. A prefix (also used adjectively, ortho), employed: a In naming certain higher forms of hydration, esp. in the case of acids. Thus, *ortho*phosphoric acid, $OP(OH)_3$, is distinguished from *meta*phosphoric acid, $O_2P(OH)$, and *ortho*formic acid, $HC(OH)_3$, from ordinary formic acid, HCO(OH). b In naming certain benzene derivatives; as, *ortho*xylene, ortho position. See BENZENE NUCLEUS.

or′tho-car-bon′ic (-kär-bŏn′ĭk), a. [ortho- + carbonic.] Chem. Designating, or pertaining to, a hypothetical acid, $C(OH)_4$, known in the form of its esters, which are prepared by the action of chloropicrin on alcoholates. The ethyl ester, or orthocarbonic ether, $C(OC_2H_5)_4$, is a liquid having a pleasant odor and boiling at 158–159° C.

Or′tho-car′pus (-kär′pŭs), n. [NL.; ortho- + Gr. καρπός fruit.] Bot. A genus of American scrophulariaceous herbs with alternate leaves and bracted spikes of flowers, the 4-cleft calyx and bilabiate corolla both tubular, the lower lip of the corolla with three inflated pouches. The species are mostly Californian, being known as owl's clover. The flowers are often showy, red, yellow, or white.

or′tho-cen′ter, or -cen′tre (ôr′thō-sĕn′tẽr), n. [ortho- + center.] Geom. The common intersection of the three altitudes of a triangle.

or'tho-clas'tic (-klăs'tĭk), a. Cryst. Cleaving in directions at right angles to each other; — said esp. of the monoclinic feldspars.

or'tho-dox (ôr'thō-dŏks), a. [L. orthodoxus, Gr. ὀρθόδοξος; ὀρθός right, true + δόξα opinion, δοκεῖν to think, seem; cf. F. orthodoxe. See ORTHO-; DOGMA.] 1. Sound in opinion or doctrine, esp. in religious doctrine; hence, holding the Christian faith as formulated in the great church creeds and confessions; — opposed to heretical and heterodox; as, an orthodox Christian. Specif. [cap.], of, pertaining to, or designating, the Eastern Church. The application of the term orthodox differs. The Eastern Church early assumed the epithet "Orthodox" as a part of its title, and it became the specific epithet of that Church, which regards all other bodies of Christians as more or less heterodox. The Protestant churches are held by the Roman Catholic Church to be not orthodox in many points. In the United States orthodox is frequently applied to those who hold the doctrine of the Trinity as distinguished from those who reject it, as the Trinitarian Congregational churches, in distinction from the Unitarian. The conservative Friends, as distinguished from the "liberal," or Hicksite, Friends, are called orthodox.

2. According to, or congruous with, the doctrines of Scripture as interpreted in some standard, as the creed of a church, the decree of a council, or the like; as, an orthodox opinion, book, etc.

or'tho-phos-phor'ic (-fŏs-fôr'ĭk), a. [ortho- + phosphoric.] Chem. Pertaining to or designating ordinary phosphoric acid, H_3PO_4; — distinguished from metaphosphoric, etc. See ORTHO-, 2 a, and PHOSPHORIC ACID.

or'tho-phyre (ôr'thō-fīr), n. [orthoclase + -phyre.] Petrog. A feldspathic porphyry consisting of a compact groundmass of alkalic feldspar with embedded crystals, chiefly of orthoclase. It occurs in intrusions such as dikes, sheets, etc. — or'tho-phyr'ic (-fĭr'ĭk), a.

or'tho-pin'a-coid (-pĭn'ă-koid), n. [ortho- + pinacoid.] Cryst. A form in the monoclinic system consisting of the two planes which are parallel to the vertical and orthodiagonal axes. — or'tho-pin'a-coi'dal (-koi'dăl), a.

or'tho-pla'sy (ôr'thō-plā'sĭ), n. [ortho- + -plasy.] Biol. The operation of organic selection as a factor in determinate or orthogenetic evolution. See ORGANIC SELECTION.

or'thop-nœ'a, or'thop-ne'a (ôr'thŏp-nē'ă), n. [L. orthopnoea, Gr. ὀρθοπνοια; ὀρθός straight, right + πνεῖν to breathe.] Med. A morbid condition in which respiration can be performed only in an erect posture.

or'thop-nœ'ic, or'thop-ne'ic (-ĭk), a. Med. Pert. to, or affected with, orthopnœa. — n. An orthopnœic person.

Or-thop'o-da (ôr-thŏp'ō-dă), n. pl. [NL.; ortho- + -poda.] Paleon. An order of large herbivorous dinosaurs having a toothless predentary bone, the hind limbs larger than the fore, and pubic bones with two branches, neither forming a symphysis with its fellow. It includes the Stegosauria and Ornithopoda. — or'tho-pod, a. & n.

or'tho-prax'y (ôr'thō-prăk'sĭ), n. [ortho- + Gr. πρᾶξις a doing.] 1. Right action or practice. Rare. 2. Med. The treatment of deformities in the human body by mechanical appliances; orthopedic surgery.

or-thop'ter (ôr-thŏp'tẽr), n. [F. orthoptère; Gr. ὀρθός straight + πτερόν wing.] Aëronautics. A flying machine propelled by flapping of wings; a mechanical bird.

Or-thop'ter-a (-tẽr-ă), n. pl. [NL.; ortho- + Gr. πτερόν feather, wing.] Zoöl. An order of insects comprising the grasshoppers, locusts, crickets, cockroaches, Mantidæ, Phasmidæ, and in some classifications the earwigs. Their mouth parts are fitted for biting, and there are typically two pairs of wings, of which the first pair are coriaceous and serve merely as a protection for the thin, transparent second pair, which fold longitudinally like a fan. Many are wingless. The Orthoptera undergo no metamorphosis. The group is divided into two chief divisions, Cursoria and Saltatoria (which see). — or-thop'ter-an (-ăn), a. & n. — or-thop'ter-ous (-ŭs), a.

or-thop'tic (-tĭk), a. [ortho- + optic.] 1. Med. Pertaining to, characterized by, or securing, normal binocular vision; as, orthoptic exercises, in which the ocular muscles are exercised by means of prisms or forced movements of the eyes in order to correct ocular deviation.

2. Math. Of or pertaining to mutually perpendicular tangents, esp. their intersection, the orthoptic locus.

or-thop'tic, n. Gun. An adjustable back sight for a gun in which the sighting disk slides in a vertical slot. The sight carries a vernier. It is now rarely used.

or'tho-pyr'a-mid (ôr'thō-pĭr'ă-mĭd), n. [ortho- + pyramid.] Cryst. A pyramid in the monoclinic system, lying between the orthodomes and the zone of unit pyramids.

or'tho-rhom'bic (-rŏm'bĭk), a. [ortho- + rhombic.] Cryst. Pertaining to or designating the system of crystallization which has three unequal axes at right angles to each other; trimetric. See CRYSTALLIZATION.

Or-thor'rha-pha (ôr-thôr'ă-fă), n. pl. [NL. See ORTHO-; -RHAPHY.] Zoöl. A large suborder of Diptera in which the pupa case opens by a T-shaped opening behind the head or by a transverse slit between the seventh and eighth abdominal segments. It includes the nematocerous and many of the brachycerous forms. — or-thor'rha-phous (-fŭs), a.

or'tho-scope (ôr'thō-skōp), n. [ortho- + -scope.] 1. Physiol. An instrument for examining the superficial portions of the eye, esp. the iris.

2. Photog. An orthoscopic lens.

or'tho-scop'ic (-skŏp'ĭk), a. Optics. Giving an image in correct or normal proportions; giving a flat field of view; as, an orthoscopic eyepiece.

or-thos'ti-chous (ôr-thŏs'tĭ-kŭs), a. [See ORTHOSTICHY.] In phyllotaxy, straight-ranked; arranged in vertical ranks.

or-thos'ti-chy (ôr-thŏs'tĭ-kĭ; ôr'thŏs-stĭk'ĭ), n.; pl. -CHIES (-kĭz; -ĭz). [ortho- + Gr. στίχος row.] Bot. In phyllotaxy, a vertical line in which lies a rank or row of leaves or scales on an axis, or the arrangement of leaves or scales in such lines. Cf. PARASTICHY, and see PHYLLOTAXIS.

or'tho-style (ôr'thō-stīl), n. [ortho- + Gr. στῦλος column.] Arch. An arrangement of columns in a straight row. — a. Of, pertaining to, or designating, such an arrangement.

or'tho-tom'ic (-tŏm'ĭk), a. [See ORTHO-; -TOMY.] Geom. Cutting at right angles. — orthotomic circle, Geom., the circle that cuts three given circles at right angles. — o. coördinates. See COÖRDINATE, n., 2. — o. surfaces, surfaces that cut each other in sets of three every where at right angles.

or-thot'o-my (ôr-thŏt'ō-mĭ), n. Geom. The fact or property of cutting at right angles.

or'tho-tone (ôr'thō-tōn), a. [Gr. ὀρθότονος with the right accent; ὀρθός straight, right + τόνος tone, accent.] Gr. Gram. Having or retaining an independent accent; not enclitic or proclitic; — said esp. of certain indefinite pronouns and adverbs when used interrogatively, which otherwise are ordinarily enclitic. — n. An orthotone word.

or'tho-to-ne'sis (-tō-nē'sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ὀρθοτόνησις.] Pronunciation as an orthotone. — or'tho-ton'ic (-tŏn'ĭk), a.

or-thot'o-nus (ôr-thŏt'ō-nŭs), n. [NL.; ortho- + Gr. τόνος tension.] Med. Rigid straightness of the body in tetanus.

-carpous.] Bot. Having straight fruit.

or'tho-cer'a-cone (ôr'thō-sĕr'ă-kōn), n. Paleon. A straight nautiloid shell resembling those of the genus Orthoceras.

or'tho-cer'a-tite (-tīt), n. [ortho- + Gr. κέρας, -ατος, a horn.] Paleon. A fossil cephalopod of Orthoceras or allied genus. — or'tho-cer'a-tit'ic (-tĭt'ĭk), a.

or'tho-chlo'rite, n. Min. Any distinctly crystalline form of chlorite, as clinochlore; — opposed to leptochlorite.

or'tho-cou-mar'ic, a. See COUMARIC.

or'tho-cy'cle (ôr'thō-sī'k'l), n. [ortho- + cycle.] = DIRECTOR CIRCLE.

or'tho-di-az'ine, n. Also -in. Org. Chem. See DIAZINE.

or'tho-dol'i-cho-ce-phal'ic, a. Craniol. Being both orthocephalic and dolichocephalic.

or'tho-dome (ôr'thō-dōm), n. Cryst. See DOME, 6. — or'tho-do-mat'ic (-dō-măt'ĭk), a.

or'tho-dox'ly, adv. of ORTHODOX.

or'tho-dox'ness, n. See -NESS.

or'tho-drom'ics (-drŏm'ĭks), n. Orthodromy.

or'thod'ro-my (ôr-thŏd'rō-mĭ; ôr'thō-drō'mĭ), n. [ortho- + Gr. δρόμος a running.] Act or art of great-circle sailing. — or'tho-drom'ic (ôr'thō-drŏm'ĭk), a.

or'tho-form (ôr'thō-fôrm), n. [ortho- + -form.] Pharm. A colorless, tasteless powder used as an antiseptic and analgesic Chemically, it is methyl-p-amino-m-hydroxy-benzoate, $C_6H_2(OH)(NH_2)CO_2CH_3$.

or-thog'a-my (ôr-thŏg'ă-mĭ), n. [ortho- + -gamy.] = AUTOGAMY. — or-thog'a-mous (-mŭs), a.

or'tho-gen'ic (-jĕn'ĭk), a. [ortho- + -genic.] Biol. Of, pertaining to, or designating orthogenesis.

or'tho-gen'i-cal-ly, adv. of ORTHOGENIC.

or'tho-gen'ics (-jĕn'ĭks), n. Orthogenesis.

or'tho-gen'ist (-jĕn'ĭst), n. One who believes in orthogenesis.

or'tho-ge-ot'ro-pism (-jē-ŏt'rō-pĭz'm), n. Biol. Orthogenetic evolution.

or'tho-ge-ot'ro-pous (-pŭs), a. [ortho- + geotropous.] Bot. Growing straight downward.

or'tho-ge-ot'ro-py (-pĭ), n. Bot. Orthogeotropous growth.

or'tho-gne'ic (-nē'ĭk), a. [ortho- + Gr. γνεῖος of the nose.] Craniom. Having the nose projecting straight forward.

or'tho-gon'ic (-gŏn'ĭk), a. [ortho- + Gr. γωνία angle.] Cryst. Having the axes at right angles.

or'tho-graph'i-cal-ly, adv. of ORTHOGRAPHICAL.

or'tho-he'ry (ôr-thō'hĕ-rĭ), n. [ortho- + -metry.] Art of correct versification. Rare.

or'tho-mor'phi-a (ôr'thō-môr'fĭ-ă), n. [NL.; ortho- + Gr. μορφή form.] Orthomorphic transformation. See CONFORMAL.

Or'tho-nec'ti-da (-nĕk'tĭ-dă), n. pl. [NL., prob. fr. Gr. ὀρθός straight + νηκτός swimming.] See RHOPALURA.

or'tho-pe'di-cal, or'tho-pæ'di-cal, a. Orthopedic.

or'tho-pe'dy, or'tho-pæ'dy (ôr'thō-pē'dĭ; ôr-thŏp'ē-dĭ), n. [Cf. F. orthopédie.] Med. Orthopedics.

or-thoph'o-ny (ôr-thŏf'ō-nĭ), n. [ortho- + -phony.] Art of correct articulation; voice training.

or'tho-plum'bate (ôr'thō-plŭm'bāt), n., or or'tho-plum'bic (-bĭk), a. See PLUMBIC ACID.

or-thop'nic (ôr-thŏp'nĭk), a. & n. Erron. for ORTHOPNŒIC.

or'tho-prax'is (ôr'thō-prăk'sĭs), n. [NL.] Orthopraxy.

or'tho-prism (ôr'thō-prĭz'm), n. [ortho- + prism.] See PRISM.

or-thop'ter (ôr-thŏp'tẽr), or-thop'ter-on (-ŏn), n. Zoöl. One of the Orthoptera.

or-thop'ter-al (-tẽr-ăl), a. Orthopterous. Rare. [terologist.

or-thop'ter-ist, n. An orthop-

Or-thop'ter-o'i-de-a (-ō'ĭ-dē-ă), or-thop'ter-oi'de-a (-ŏi'dē-ă), n. pl. [NL.] See PALÆODICTYOPTERA. — or-thop'ter-oid, a. & n.

or-thop'ter-ol'o-gy (-ŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [Orthoptera + -logy.] The study of, or a treatise on, the Orthoptera.

or-thop'ter-o-log'i-cal (-ō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. — or-thop'ter-ol'o-gist (-ŏl'ō-jĭst), n.

or'tho-quin'one (-kwĭn'ōn; -kwĭ-nōn'), n. See QUINONE.

Orthorhapha, orthorhaphous. Vars. of ORTHORRHAPHA, etc.

or-thor'rha-phy (ôr-thôr'ă-fĭ), n. Zoöl. The condition or character of being orthorrhaphous.

or'those (ôr'thōs), n. [ortho- + -ose.] Min. Orthoclase.

or'tho-sem'i-dine, n. Also -din. Org. Chem. See SEMIDINE.

or'tho-sil'i-cate, n. Chem. See SILICATE. [SILICIC ACID.]

or'tho-si-lic'ic, a. Chem. See or'tho-sis (ôr'thō-sĭs), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ὀρθωσις.] Surg. A making straight, as of a bent part.

or'tho-sper'mous (ôr'thō-spûr'mŭs), a. [ortho- + Gr. σπέρμα seed.] Bot. Having the seeds straight, as certain umbelliferes; — opposed to cœlospermous.

or'tho-stade (ôr'thō-stād), n. [Greek ὀρθοστάδιον; ὀρθός straight + στάδιος standing.] Anc. Costume. A chiton, or loose, ungirded tunic, falling in straight folds.

or'thos-ul-phu'ric, a. See SULPHURIC ACID.

or'tho-tel-lu'ric. a. See ORTHO-2 a. — or'tho-tel'lu-rate (see -ATE, 3 b), n.

or'tho-to-lu'i-dine, n. Also -din. See ORTHO-; TOLUIDINE.

or-thot'o-mous (ôr-thŏt'ō-mŭs), a. Cryst. = ORTHOCLASTIC.

or'tho-tone, v. t. To accent; to pronounce as an orthotone.

or-thot'ro-pism (ôr-thŏt'rō-pĭz'm), n. [ortho- + -tropism.] Plant Physiol. Vertical growth; the tendency to elongate vertically, as most primary stems and roots. Cf. PLAGIOTROPISM. — or'tho-trop'ic (ôr'thō-trŏp'ĭk), a.

or-thot'ro-pous (ôr-thŏt'rō-pŭs), a. [ortho- + Gr. τρέπειν to turn.] Bot. a Having the nucellus straight, so that the chalaza, hilum, and micropyle are in the same axial line; — applied to certain ovules, as those of Polygonaceæ. b = HOMOTROPOUS. c = ORTHOTROPIC.

or-thot'ro-py (-pĭ), n. [ortho- + -tropy.] Bot. Condition of being orthotropous.

or'tol (ôr'tŏl; -tōl), n. [G., a trade name.] Photog. A yellowish white, soluble, crystalline substance, used as a developer and also as an intensifier. It is a derivative of phenol.

or'to-lan (ôr'tō-lăn), n. [F., fr. It. ortolano ortolan, gardener, fr. L. hortulanus gardener, fr. hortulus, dim. of hortus garden: cf. Pr. ortolan gardener. So called because it frequents the hedges of gardens. See YARD an inclosure; cf. HORTULAN.] 1. A European bunting (Emberiza hortulana). It is about six inches long, with a greenish gray head, brown-and-black wings and back, yellowish breast, and buff abdomen. Large numbers of them are netted and fattened for table delicacies.

Ortolan (Emberiza hortulana).

2. a The wheatear. Local, Eng. b The sora rail. c The bobolink. Local, U. S.

or'y (ôr'ĭ; 201), a. [ore + 3d -y.] Resembling or containing metallic ore.

-ory. [L. -orius: cf. F. -oire.] 1. An adjective suffix meaning of or pertaining to, serving for; as in auditory, pert. to or serving for hearing; prohibitory, amendatory. 2. [L. -orium: cf. F. -oire.] A noun suffix denoting place of or for, or that which pertains to or serves for; as in ambulatory, that which serves for walking; consistory, etc.

O'ryx (ō'rĭks; ŏr'ĭks; 201), n. [NL., fr. L. oryx a kind of gazelle or antelope, Gr. ὄρυξ.] 1. Zoöl. A genus of large African antelopes having (in both sexes) long, cylindrical, and nearly straight horns ribbed in their basal half and projecting backward in nearly exact continuation of the plane of the forehead and nose. The tail is long and tufted and the neck rather short and thick. The principal species are the gemsbok, beisa, beatrix, and leucoryx antelopes.

Oryx (O. beatrix).

2. [l. c.] Any antelope of the genus Oryx.

O-ryʸza (ō-rīʸzä), n. [L., rice, Gr. ὄρυζα. See RICE.] Bot. A genus of East Indian cereal grasses known by the perfect flowers with six stamens. O. sativa is the rice plant.

os cal'cis (kăl'sĭs) [L., calcis, gen. of calx heel], Anat. & Zoöl., the calcaneum. — os cen-tra'le (sĕn-trā'lē) [NL.], Anat. & Zoöl., the centrale. — os clo-a'cæ (klō-ā'sē) [NL., bone of the cloaca. See CLOACA, 3], Zoöl., the hypoischium. — os coc-cy'gis (kŏk-sī'jĭs) [L., bone of the coccyx], Anat., the coccyx. — os cor'dis (kôr'dĭs) [L., bone of the heart], Zoöl., a nodule of bone in the septum of the heart of certain mammals, as the elephant and ox. — os ha-ma'tum (hă-mā'tŭm) [L. hamatum, neut. of hamatus hooked], the uniform bone. — os in-no'mi-na'tum (ĭ-nō'mĭ-nā'tŭm). [L.] Anat. See INNOMINATUM. — os Ja-po'ni-cum (jă-pŏn'ĭ-kŭm) [NL., the Japanese bone], Craniol., the lower part of the malar bone when the bone is divided by a suture. It is of especially frequent occurrence among Japanese and Ainus, although found in other races. — os mag'num [L., great bone], Anat., a bone of the carpus situated at the base of the third metacarpus. — os or-bi-cu-la're (ôr-bĭk'ū-lā'rē; 115) [L.], Anat., the orbicular bone. See LENTICULAR PROCESS. — os pe'dis [L., bone of the foot], Far., the coffin bone. — os pla'num [L. planum, neut. of planus flat], Anat., the outer surface of each lateral mass of the ethmoid bone. — os pu'bis [L.], Anat. & Zoöl., the pubis. — os sa'crum [L.], Anat. & Zoöl., the sacrum. — os suf-fra'gi-nis (sŭ-frăj'ĭ-nĭs) [L., bone of the hock], Far., the great pastern bone. — os trans-ver'sum (trănz-vûr'sŭm) [L.], Zoöl., the transverse bone of a reptile's skull. See under TRANSVERSE, a. — os tri-que'trum (trī-kwē'trŭm) [L. triquetrum triangular], Anat., a Wormian bone. — os un'guis (ŭn'gwĭs) [lit., the bone of the nail], Anat., the lachrymal bone.

O-sage' (ō-sāj'; ō'sāj), n.; pl. OSAGES (-ĕz). 1. One of a tribe of Siouan Indians, formerly dwelling between the Missouri River and the Arkansas River, but now on an agency in Oklahoma. Per capita they are, from the sale of their lands, the wealthiest tribe in the United States. 2. [From the Osage River, Missouri.] Geol. A subdivision of the Mississippian (Subcarboniferous) in the Mississippi basin. See GEOLOGY, Chart.

3. Short for OSAGE ORANGE.

O'sage or'ange (ō'sāj). An ornamental American moraceous tree (Toxylon pomiferum) closely allied to the mulberry; also, its yellow, tubercled, apple-shaped fruit, composed of the united fleshy calyxes of the pistillate flowers. The tree was first found in the country of the Osage Indians, and is now commonly planted for hedges.

os'a-mine (ŏs'ä-mĭn; ŏs'ä-mēn'; 184), n. Also osamin. [G. osamin. See -OSE; AMINE.] Org. Chem. Any of a class of compounds derived from sugars by replacement of hydroxyl with amidogen.

os'a-zone (ŏs'ä-zōn), n. [-ose + hydrazone.] Org. Chem. A dihydrazone having the two phenyl hydrazone groups ($:N\cdot NHC_6H_5$) attached to two adjacent carbon atoms; as, glucosazone. See HYDRAZONE. The osazones are formed by the action of phenyl hydrazine on compounds containing the grouping -CO-CO-, or (as in the case of the sugars) -CH(OH)-CO-, in the latter case with oxidation of the alcohol group. Certain other similar classes of compounds also yield them. The osazones are yellow compounds. By reason of being well crystallized, nearly insoluble, and easily distinguishable from one another by melting point, etc., they are of great importance in the isolation and study of the various kinds of sugar.

Os-bal'di-stone, Francis (ŏs-bôl'dĭ-stōn). A leading character in Scott's romance "Rob Roy." His father is a wealthy London merchant who, estranged by the son's refusal to lead a merchant's life, sends him away to his father's brother in the north. He falls in love with Diana Vernon, his cousin, and with the aid of Rob Roy rescues her from his unprincipled cousin Rash'leigh Os-bal'di-stone (răsh'lĭ), who is killed by Rob Roy.

Os'can (ŏs'kăn), n. [L. Oscus, pl. Osci.] One of a race of ancient Italy occupying Campania and probably in late prehistoric times constituting a distinct nation; also, their language, specimens of which are preserved in inscriptions, coins, etc. It employed an alphabet intermediate between the Latin and the Greek. See INDO-EUROPEAN. — Os'can, a.

os'che-o- (ŏs'kĕ-ō-), os'che- (ŏs'kĕ-). Combining form from Greek ὀσχεος, ὄσχεον, the scrotum.

Os-cil-la'ri-a (ŏs'ĭ-lā'rĭ-ä; 115), n. [NL., fr. L. oscillare to swing.] Bot. Agenus of blue-green algæ typifying the family Oscillariaceæ.

Os'cil-la'ri-a'ce-æ (ă'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See OSCILLARIA.] Bot. A family of blue-green algæ of the class Schizophyceæ, containing about 5 or 6 genera and numerous species, growing in water or on damp ground. They consist of slender filaments, often matted together, and commonly exhibiting oscillating movements. Reproduction is entirely vegetative, by means of segments (hormogonia) split off from the filaments. — os'cil-la'ri-a'ceous (-shŭs), a.

os'cil-late (ŏs'ĭ-lāt), v. i.; OSCIL-LAT'ED (-lāt'ĕd); OSCIL-LAT'ING (-lāt'ĭng). [L. oscillare to swing, fr. oscillum a swing.] 1. To move or swing backward and forward; to vibrate like a pendulum.

2. To vary or fluctuate between fixed limits; to act or move in a fickle or fluctuating manner; to change repeatedly, back and forth.

> The amount of superior faculties oscillates rather than changes, that is, it fluctuates within fixed limits. De Quincey.

3. Physics, Math., etc. To vibrate or vary above and below a mean value. See OSCILLATION, 3, 4.

Syn. — See FLUCTUATE.

os'cil-late, v. t. To swing or sway back and forth.

os'cil-lat'ing (-lāt'ĭng), p. pr. & vb. n. of OSCILLATE. — oscillating current, a current alternating in direction. — o. engine, a direct-acting steam engine with cylinder supported on hollow trunnions (furnished with steam ports) through which it oscillates to permit the piston rod to follow the crank throughout its path and thus dispense with the connecting rod. It is now practically obsolete.

os'cil-la'tion (-lā'shŭn), n. [L. oscillatio a swinging.]

1. Act or fact of oscillating; a swinging or moving backward and forward, like a pendulum; vibration.

2. Fluctuation; variation; change back and forth.

> His mind oscillated, undoubtedly; but the extreme points of the oscillation were not very remote. Macaulay.

3. Physics. A single swing from one extreme limit to the other of an oscillating body; also, Elec., an electric oscillation (see under ELECTRIC). Oscillations are damped when continually decreasing in amplitude, undamped (or persistent) when maintained with undiminished amplitude, forced when the period is that of an impressed force.

4. Math. The variation of a function between limits; specif.: a Of a function in a finite interval, the difference between the superior and the inferior limits of the function values in the interval. b Of a function at a point a, the difference between the greatest and the least of the five values, $f(a)$ and the four limits of indefiniteness at a, when all are finite.

oscillation constant. Elec. In an oscillating circuit, the time of one oscillation divided by 2π. It is equal to the square root of the product of inductance and capacity ($\sqrt{LC}$) and is the reciprocal of the oscillation number.

oscillation number. Elec. In an oscillating circuit, the number of oscillations in 2π seconds.

os'cil-la-tive (ŏs'ĭ-lā-tĭv), a. Tending to oscillate; vibratory. Rare. — os'cil-la-tive-ly, adv. Rare.

os'cil-la'tor (-lā'tẽr), n. One that oscillates; specif.: a Elec. Any device for producing electric oscillations; esp., an apparatus for generating electric waves in a system of wireless telegraphy. b Mech. An instrument for measuring rigidity by the torsional oscillations of a weighted wire.

os'cil-la-to-ry (-lă-tō-rĭ), a. [See OSCILLATE.] Characterized by oscillation; oscillating; vibratory.

os'cil-lo-gram (-lŏ-grăm), n. [L. oscillare + -gram.] Elec. An autographic record made by an oscillograph.

os'cil-lo-graph (-grăf), n. [L. oscillare to swing + -graph.] Elec. An apparatus for recording or indicating alternating-current wave forms or other electrical oscillations, usually consisting of a galvanometer with strong field, in which the mass of the moving part is very small and frequency of vibration very high. — os'cil-lo-graph'ic (-grăf'ĭk), a.

os'cil-lom'e-ter (-lŏm'ē-tẽr), n. [L. oscillare to swing + -meter.] An instrument for measuring the angle through which a ship rolls or pitches at sea.

os-cil'lo-scope (ō-sĭl'ō-skōp), n. [L. oscillare to swing + -scope.] Elec. An instrument for showing visually the changes in a varying current; an oscillograph.

os'cine (ŏs'ĭn; -īn), a. Zoöl. Relating to, or having the character of, the Oscines. — n. One of the Oscines.

Os'ci-nes (ŏs'ĭ-nēz), n. pl. [L. pl. of oscen, -inis.] Zoöl. A division (in recent classifications a superfamily) of passerine birds comprising those with the most highly specialized vocal apparatus. Its members are commonly referred to as the singing birds, though many among them do not sing. As now restricted the group contains those eleven heterodactyl passerine birds having four to five pairs of diacromyodian syringeal muscles, and comprises by far the majority (about 5,000 species) of passerine birds. See PASSERIFORMES.

os'ci-tan-cy (-tăn-sĭ) } gaping or yawning.

2. Drowsiness; dullness; sluggishness. Haliam.

os'ci-tant (-tănt), a. [L. oscitans, -antis, p. pr. of oscitare.]

1. Yawning; gaping.

2. Sleepy; drowsy; dull; sluggish; careless.

> He must not be oscitant, but intent on his charge. Barrow.

os'ci-tate (-tāt), v. i.; OSCI-TAT'ED (-tāt'ĕd); OSCI-TAT'ING (-tāt'ĭng). [L. oscitare; os the mouth + citare, v. intens. fr. ciere to move.] To gape; yawn. Rare. — os'ci-ta'tion (-tā'shŭn), n. Rare.

osc'node' (ŏsk'nōd'), n. [osculate + node.] Math. A node that is also a point of osculation; a three-point contact of two branches of a curve.

os'cu-lant (ŏs'kŭ-lănt), a. [L. osculans, -antis, p. pr. of osculari to kiss. See OSCULATE.] 1. Kissing; hence, meeting; clinging.

2. a Zoöl. Adhering closely; embracing. b Biol. Intermediate in character; forming a connecting link between two groups.

os'cu-lar (-lăr), a. [L. osculum little mouth, a kiss.]

1. Of or pertaining to the mouth or a kiss.

2. Zoöl. Of or pertaining to an osculum.

3. Math. Relating to contact of higher than the first order. — osculare line, Math., a straight line lying throughout Or'trud (ôr'trōd), n. See LOORTS (ôrts; ŏts), n. pl. Rejected bits. See ORT.

ortyard, ortyerd. † ORCHARD.

or'ty-gan (ôr'tĭ-găn), n. [Gr. ὄρτυξ, -υγος, a quail.] One of several East Indian birds of the genus Turnix. [ARTEMIS.]

Or-tyg'i-a (ôr-tĭj'ĭ-ä), n. See Ortygi'an (-ăn), a. Of or pertaining to Ortygia, an island in the bay of Syracuse, Sicily.

Or'ty-gi'næ (ôr'tĭ-jī'nē), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gr. ὄρτυξ, ὄρτυγος, quail.] Zoöl. A subfamily of quails, equiv. to Odontophorinæ.

Or'tyx (ôr'tĭks), n. [NL. See ORTYGIN.E.] Syn. of COLINUS.

or'val, n. [F. orvale a kind of sage.] Obs. a The garden orpine. b The clary.

or'vet (ôr'vĕt; ôr'vĕ'), n. [F.] The blindworm.

or'vi-e'tan (ôr'vĭ-ē'tăn), n. [F. orviétan, It. orvietano; — because invented at Orvieto, in Italy.] A counter-poison formerly in vogue. Obs. or Hist.

Or-vie'to (ôr-vyā'tō), n. A kind of muscatel wine from Orvieto, Italy.

or'y (ôr'ĭ), a. [ore seaweed + 3d -y.] Resembling seaweed. Dial. Eng.

o'ry-al. † ORIEL.

Or'yc-ter'o-pus (ôr'ĭk-tĕr'ō-pŭs), n. [NL.; Gr. ὀρυκτήρ digger + πούς foot.] Zoöl. The genus consisting of the aardvarks. It constitutes a family, Or'yc-ter'o-pod'i-dæ (-pŏd'ĭ-dē).

o-ryc'tics (ō-rĭk'tĭks), n. [Gr. ὀρυκτικός fit for digging.] Oryctology. Rare.

or'yc-tog'no-sy (ôr'ĭk-tŏg'nō-sĭ), n. [Gr. ὀρυκτός dug (ὀρύσσειν to dig) + γνῶσις knowledge.] Mineralogy. — or'yc-tog-nos'tic (-nŏs'tĭk), a. — or'yc-tog-nos'ti-cal-ly, adv. All Obs.

or'yc-tog'ra-phy (-tŏg'rä-fĭ), n. [Gr. ὀρυκτός dug + -graphy.] Description of fossils or minerals. Obs. — o-ryc'to-graph'ic, a. Obs.

or'yc-tog-o-gy (-tŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [Gr. ὀρυκτός dug + -logy.] = F. oryctologie. Description of the things dug from the earth; specif.: a Mineralogy. b Paleontology. — or'yc-to-log'ic, -log'i-cal, a. — or'yc-tol'o-gist (-tŏl'ō-jĭst), n. All Obs.

Or'y-gi'næ (ŏr'ĭ-jī'nē), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gr. ὄρυξ, ὄρυγος, a kind of antelope.] Zoöl. = HIPPOTRAGINÆ.

o-ryl'ic (ō-rĭl'ĭk), a. [Gr. ὀρός whey + -yl + -ic.] Designating an acid, $C_{15}H_{30}N_2O_3$, derived from carnic acid, and said to occur in milk.

Or'y-zi'vo-rous (ŏr'ĭ-zĭv'ō-rŭs), a. [Gr. ὄρυζα rice + -vorous.] Feeding on rice.

O-ryz'o-mys (ō-rĭz'ō-mĭs; ŏ-rĭz'ō-), n. [NL.; Gr. ὄρυζα rice + μῦς mouse.] Zoöl. A large genus of murine rodents including the rice rats.

Or'y-zop'sis (ŏr'ĭ-zŏp'sĭs) n. [NL.; Gr. ὄρυζα rice + ὄψις] Bot. A genus of American tufted grasses with open panicles composed of 1-flowered spikelets remotely suggesting rice, whence the species are known as mountain rice.

O-ryz'o-ric'tes (ō-rĭz'ō-rĭk'tēz), n. [NL.; Gr. ὄρυζα rice + ὀρυκτής digger.] Zoöl. A genus of small molelike insectivores of Madagascar, related to the tenrec. It is the type of a subfamily, O-ryz'o-ric-ti'næ (-rĭk-tī'nē).

os-cin'i-an (ŏ-sĭn'ĭ-ăn), a. & n. Zoöl. = OSCINE. Rare. b Pertaining to the Oscinidæ.

os'ci-nine (ŏs'ĭ-nĭn; -nĭn; 183), a. Zoöl. Oscine.

Os'ci-nis (ŏ-sī'nĭs), n. [NL., prob. fr. L. oscen, oscinis, a singing bird.] Zoöl. A genus of small acalyptrate dipterous flies, the type of a family, Os-cin'i-dæ (ŏ-sĭn'ĭ-dē). whose larvæ usually burrow in the stalks of grasses or the leaves of succulent plants. The frit fly (Oscinis frit) is an example.

os'ci-tant-ly, adv. of OSCITANT.

Os'co-Um'bri-an. a. Of, pertaining to, or designating, the language group comprising Oscan and Umbrian.

os'cu-la. n., pl. of OSCULUM.

os'cu-lant (ŏs'kŭ-lā-ănt), n. Math. The resultant whose vanishing is the condition that, for the same system of values of x variables, n quantics, U, V, etc., shall vanish and the corresponding tangential quantics $xU_1' + yU_2' + \ldots, xV_1' + yV_2' + \ldots$, shall beconnected by a linear relation.

os'cu-la-ry, n. An osculatory.

its length on a surface and everywhere in the same tangent plane, in whose section of the surface this line is counted three times.

os'cu-late (ŏs'kū-lāt), v. t. & i.; -LATED (-lā'tĕd); -LATING (-lā'tĭng). [L. osculatus, p. p. of osculari to kiss, fr. osculum a little mouth, a kiss, dim. of os mouth. See ORAL.] 1. To kiss.

2. Geom. To touch closely so as to have three or more points in common at the point of contact; specif., to have the highest order of contact (with a given curve or surface) that is possible for the particular kind of osculating curve or surface. Thus a circle (in general) osculates a curve when it has contact of second order or meets the curve in three consecutive points; but a conic may osculate at five consecutive points, and a sphere osculates a twisted curve at four consecutive points. See OSCULATION, 2.

3. Biol. To have characters in common with two groups. See OSCULANT, a., 2 b.

os'cu-lat'ing (-lāt'ĭng), p. pr. & vb. n. of OSCULATE. — osculating circle (of a curve, at a point), Math., the circle of closest possible contact with a curve at a point. It passes through three (or more) consecutive points of the curve. Its radius and center are the radius and center of curvature of the curve at that point, and hence it is called circle of curvature at that point. — o. helix, Geom., the helix that has the same curvature and torsion as a certain curve at a certain point.

os'cu-la'tion (-lā'shŭn), n. [L. osculatio a kissing: cf. F. osculation.] 1. Act of kissing; a kiss.

2. Geom. The contact of a curve or surface with an osculating curve or surface. See OSCULATE, 2.

os'cu-la-to-ry (ŏs'kū-lā-tō-rĭ), a. 1. Of or pertaining to kissing; kissing. "The osculatory ceremony." Thackeray.

2. Geom. Osculating; relating to osculation.

os'cu-la-to-ry, n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). [LL. osculatorium.] R. C. Ch. A pax, or likeness of Christ or of the Virgin, which priest and people used to kiss during Mass.

os'cu-la'trix (-lā'trĭks), n.; pl. -TRIXES (-trĭk-sĕz; -sĭz; 151). [NL.] Geom. a An osculating curve. b The envelope of the osculating planes of a twisted curve.

os'cu-lum (ŏs'kū-lŭm), n.; L. pl. OSCULA (-lă). [L., a little mouth.] Zoöl. a One of the excurrent orifices of a sponge. b One of the suckers of a tapeworm.

-ose (-ōs; see note below). [L. -osus: cf. F. -ose. Cf. -OUS.] 1. A suffix denoting full of, containing, having the qualities of, like; as in verbose, full of words; globose, like a globe.

2. [F. -ose, orig. uncert. Cf. GLUCOSE.] Chem. A suffix indicating that the substance to the name of which it is affixed is: a A carbohydrate; as in cellulose, fructose, etc. b A primary alteration, of hydration, product of a proteid; as in proteose, elastose, albumose, etc.

3. Petrog. See PETROGRAPHY.

☞ The original accent in adjectives in -ose is on the suffix, and this remains in some common adjectives, esp. dissyllables, as mo-rose', ver-bose', but otherwise the accent has usually shifted, or is shifting, esp. in polysyllables and scientific terms, as flex'u-ose, cy'mose.

o-se'la (ō-sē'lă) } n.; pl. OSELE, OSELLE (-lā). Also oscella.
o-sel'la (ō-sĕl'lă) } [It. dial. (Venetian) osela.] Venetian Hist. A silver medal struck on occasions by order of the doge, said to represent a present of wild fowl formerly sent by him to each of the noble families of the republic.

o'sier (ō'zhēr), n. [F. osier, orig. uncert.; cf. LL. ausariae, pl.] 1. Any of various willows whose pliable twigs are used for furniture, basketry, etc. The common osier widely cultivated for this purpose is the European Salix viminalis, sometimes also called velvet osier. Other useful species are the brown, or Norfolk, osier (S. triandra); the golden osier (S. alba vitellina); and green osier or purple willow (S. purpurea). Others are occasionally so used.

2. An osier rod used in basketry, esp. a coarse unstripped rod used for making hampers, etc. The finer rods are usually stripped and whitened.

3. Any of several American dogwoods (Cornus).

o'sier, a. Made of osiers; composed of, or containing, osiers. "This osier cage of ours." Shak.

o'siered (ō'zhērd), a. Covered or adorned with osiers.

o'sier-y (ō'zhēr-ĭ), n.; pl. OSIERIES (-ĭz). A bed where osiers are grown; also, work made of osiers.

O-si'ris (ō-sī'rĭs), n. [L., fr. Gr. Ὄσιρις; of Egypt. origin.] Egypt. Relig. The great god of the underworld and judge of the dead. He was son of Seb and Nut, brother and husband of Isis, father of Horus and Anubis. He is said to have been a wise and beneficent king of Egypt, who was treacherously slain by his brother Set. Isis placed his body in a coffin, but Set dismembered and scattered it. Isis then searched out and buried each part of the body. This legend is viewed as symbolical of the Egyptian treatment of the dead body, and in inscriptions the dead man, or his soul, is often addressed as "Osiris." The legend is also regarded as showing that Osiris was originally a corn spirit (which see), and some authorities regard the Osirian rites as the source of the Eleusinian mysteries. Osiris was often identified with the sun god Ra as the source of life and fruitfulness. He is commonly represented as a mummied figure wearing the crown of Upper Egypt and carrying a whip and crook. — O-si'ri-an (ō-sĭ'rĭ-ăn; -sĭr'ĭ-ăn), a.

Osiris.

Osiris stands in Egypt for the prototype of the man who after a virtuous life must die, but who afterwards rose again to live forever.

-osis. [Gr. -ωσις, as in μεταμόρφωσις metamorphosis.] A suffix signifying condition, state, process, and the like; as, sphrigo*sis*; — often used specif. in medicine to denote an abnormal or diseased condition; as, melano*sis*, phlogo*sis*, steno*sis*, etc.

-os'i-ty. [L. -ositas: cf. F. -osité.] A suffix of nouns corresponding to adjectives in -ose and -ous. See -OSE, -OUS, -ITY.

os-mam'ine (ŏs-măm'ĭn; ŏz-; ŏs'mă-mēn'; ŏz'-; 184), n. Also -in. [osmium + amine.] Chem. Any of a class of compounds of osmium salts with ammonia.

Os-man'li (ŏs-măn'lĭ), n.; pl. -LIS (-lĭz). [Turk. 'osmānli of Osman, or Othman. See OTTOMAN.] A Turk of the European branch of the Turkish race, characteristically tall, brunet, and brachycephalic, but differing little in feature from the surrounding European population; also, the language of the Osmanli Turks. See URAL-ALTAIC.

os'mate (ŏs'māt; ŏz'-; 277), n. Chem. a Any of a series of compounds obtained from osmium tetroxide by reduction in the presence of bases, and regarded as salts of the hypothetical osmic acid, H_2OsO_4. b A supposed salt of the so-called osmic acid (osmium tetroxide).

os'ma-zome (-mă-zōm), n. [Gr. ὀσμή smell, odor + ζωμός broth: cf. F. osmazôme.] Old Chem. The mixture formerly supposed to be a savory principle of flesh, and obtained as a brown substance by extracting broth or the like with alcohol.

Larva of a Butterfly (Papilio troilus). o Osmeterium.

os'me-te'ri-um (-mē-tē'rĭ-ŭm), n.; L. pl. -RIA (-ă). [NL., fr. Gr. ὀσμή smell.] Zoöl. A protrusile forked process, emitting a disagreeable odor, borne on the first thoracic segment of the larvæ of many butterflies of the family Papilionidæ. It is probably a defensive organ.

os'mic (ŏs'mĭk; ŏz'-), a. Chem. Of or pertaining to osmium; — said specif. of certain compounds in which this element exhibits a relatively high valence. — osmic acid. a See OSMATE, a. b See OSMIUM TETROXIDE. — o. oxide, osmium dioxide, OsO_2, a grayish black or copper-colored solid.

os'mi-dro'sis (-mĭ-drō'sĭs), n. [NL.; Gr. ὀσμή smell + ἱδροῦν to sweat.] Med. Secretion of fetid sweat.

os'mi-o- (ŏs'mĭ-ō- ; ŏz'-) } Chem. Combining forms for os'mo- (ŏs'mō- ; ŏz'-) } osmium.

os'mi-ous (-mĭ-ŭs), a. Chem. Of or pertaining to osmium; — said of certain compounds in which this element exhibits a relatively low valence.

os'mi-um (-ŭm), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ὀσμή a smell, odor, akin to ὄζειν to smell. So named in allusion to the strong chlorinelike odor of osmium tetroxide.] See ODOR.] Chem. A hard, bluish or grayish white metallic element of the platinum group, the heaviest substance known (sp. gr. in crystalline form, 23.48). Symbol, Os; at. wt., 190.9. Osmium was discovered by Tennant in 1803. It is found as an alloy (chiefly with iridium) in the form of small hard grains or scales in platinum ores. In compact form it is insoluble in all acids, including aqua regia. It melts at about 2500° C. It is used for electric-light filaments. Its alloy with iridium is used for compass bearings and for tipping gold pens; its alloy with platinum, for standard weights and measures. Chemically, osmium exhibits the valences 2, 3, 4, 6, and 8, being acidic in the last two.

osmium lamp. Elec. An incandescent lamp with a filament of osmium or an alloy thereof. Cf. TUNGSTEN LAMP.

osmium tetroxide. Chem. A white volatile crystalline substance, OsO_4, the most stable and characteristic of the compounds of osmium. It has a burning taste and gives off a vapor, which is a powerful irritant poison, violently attacking the eyes, and emitting a strong chlorinelike odor. A solution of it is used in microscopy for hardening and coloring tissues. Called also osmium peroxide and, improperly, osmic acid, perosmic acid.

os'mo- (ŏs'mō- ; ŏz'mō-). Chem. Combining form for osmium. See OSMIO-.

os'mo-gene (-jēn), n. [osmose + -gene.] An apparatus, consisting of a number of cells whose sides are of parchment paper, for conducting the process of osmosis. It is used esp. in sugar refining to remove potassium salts from the molasses.

os'mo-graph (-grăf), n. [osmose — -graph.] Physics. An instrument for recording the height of the liquid in an endosmometer or for registering osmotic pressures.

os-mom'e-ter (ŏs-mŏm'ē-tẽr ; ŏz-), n. [Gr. ὀσμή smell + -meter.] Physiol. An instrument for measuring the acuteness of the sense of smell.

os-mom'e-ter, n. [osmose + -metr.] Physics. An instrument for measuring osmotic acton.

os-mom'e-try (-trĭ), n. The measurement of osmotic pressure. — os'mo-met'ric (ŏs'mō-mĕt'rĭk ; ŏz'mō-), a.

os-mo'sis (ŏs-mō'sĭs ; ŏz- ; 277), os'mose (ŏs'mōs ; ŏz'-), n. [NL. osmosis. Osmose is from endo*smose*, exo*smose* (Oxf. E. D.), which are fr. F., the second part coming fr. Gr. ὠσμός impulse (fr. ὠθεῖν to push)] — -ose, fr. L. -osis, Gr. -ωσις, in abstract nouns from verbs.] Physics & Chem. A kind of diffusion which takes place between two miscible fluids separated by a permeable partition, as an animal membrane, and which tends to equalization of the conditions on the two sides of the partition; — called also diosmosis or diosmose. In a common experiment illustrating this, a porous vessel containing a liquid is surrounded by a less dense or less concentrated liquid. The more rapid flow from the thinner to the denser fluid is hence called endosmosis or endosmose (osmosis inward), and the slower flow in the opposite direction, exosmosis or exosmose (osmosis outward), though both are parts of the same process. Electric osmose or osmosis (called also electric endosmose or endosmosis) is osmosis which occurs in an electrolytic cell having a porous diaphragm separating the cathode and anode, and which is due only to the electromotive force. It results in an accumulation of liquid about the cathode. Osmosis is an important process in plant and animal physiology. See also OSMOTIC PRESSURE, ABSORPTION, 3.

os-mot'ic (ŏs-mŏt'ĭk ; ŏz-), a. Of or pert. to, or having the property of, osmosis. — os-mot'i-cal-ly (-ĭ-kăl-ĭ), adv. osmotic equivalent, the ratio between the amount of solvent water that passes through the membrane or septum of an osmotic cell and the amount of solute which passes in the opposite direction. — o. pressure, the unbalanced pressure which gives rise to the phenomena of diffusion and of osmosis, as in a solution in which there are differences of concentration. It is closely related to gas pressure. It is proportional to the absolute temperature and also to the molecular concentration, and apparently it is equal to what the pressure of the dissolved substance would be if it were a gas at the same temperature and had a volume equal to that of the pure solvent.

os'mund (ŏs'mŭnd ; ŏz'-), n. [F. osmonde.] a Any of various ferns, as the male fern. Obs. b Any fern of the genus Osmunda, esp. O. regalis, the royal fern.

os'mund (ŏz'mŭnd), n. [Sw.: cf. LG. osemunt, osemund.] A superior kind of iron formerly imported into England from Sweden and used esp. for making arrowheads, fishhooks, clock works, etc.; also, a piece of this iron.

Os-mun'da (ŏs-mŭn'dă ; ŏz-), n. [LL.; cf. F. osmonde.] Bot. A genus of swamp ferns typifying the family Osmundaceæ, and forming large clumps or crowns. The ample fronds in some species develop contracted sporangia-bearing segments at the middle or apex; in others, as O. cinnamomea, the sporophylls are distinct. See ROYAL FERN, CLAYTON FERN, CINNAMON FERN.

Os'mun-da'ce-æ (ŏs'mŭn-dā'sē-ē ; ŏz'-), n. pl. [NL.] Bot. A family of large ferns, with stout rootstocks, pinnate or bipinnate circinate fronds, and large globose sporangia borne on modified or contracted pinnæ, or on the lower surface of the pinnules. It embraces 3 genera, only one (Osmunda) American. — os'mun-da'ceous (-shŭs), a.

os'mund fur'nace (ŏz'mŭnd). Iron Manuf. A kind of high forge, intermediate in development between the Catalan forge and the blast furnace, formerly used for making a wrought iron from which wire was first made in England, in the 15th century.

osmund iron. Osmund; also, iron made in the osmund furnace.

o'so-ber'ry (ō'sō-bĕr'ĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-ĭz). The blue-black, cherrylike fruit of the amygdalaceous shrub Osmaronia cerasiformis, of Oregon and California; also, the plant.

os'one (ŏs'ōn), n. [G. oson; corresponding to -ose + -one in English.] Org. Chem. Any of a series of soluble compounds obtained by decomposing osazones with concentrated hydrochloric acid. They are hydroxylated ketonic aldehydes, and yield sugars by reduction.

o'so-tri-az'ole (ō'sō-trī-ăz'ōl), n. [From -ose + triazole.] Organic Chem. A crystalline compound, HC:N>NH, obtained indirectly from the hydrazide of a HC:N nitroso derivative of acetone.

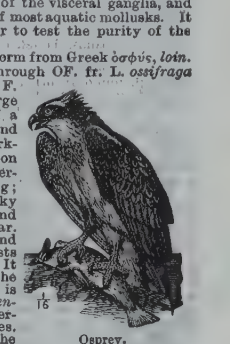
os-phra'di-um (ŏs-frā'dĭ-ŭm), n.; pl. -DIA (-ă). [NL., fr. Gr. ὀσφράδιον strong scent.] Zoöl. A sense organ, single or paired, connected with one of the visceral ganglia, and situated near the gill or gills of most aquatic mollusks. It is supposed to be olfactory or to test the purity of the water passing to the gills.

osphyo-, osphy-. Combining form from Greek ὀσφύς, loin.

os'prey (ŏs'prā), n. [Prob. through OF. fr. L. ossifraga (orig., the bone breaker); cf. F. orfraie. Cf. OSSIFRAGE.] A large hawk (Pandion haliaëtus) of a dark brown color above and mostly pure white below, remarkable for its habit of feeding on fish, which it captures by hovering over the water and diving; the fish hawk. It builds a bulky nest, usually placed in a tree and often occupied year after year. The osprey is harmless, and where protected, often nests close to human habitations. It is found in most countries of the world. The American form is the subspecies P. h. carolinensis. Egret plumes are often erroneously called osprey plumes. No plumes are produced by the osprey. See AIGRETTE.



Osprey.

os'cule (ŏs'kūl), n. [Cf. F. oscule.] Zoöl. An osculum.

os'cu-lif'er-ous (ŏs'kū-lĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. [L. osculum osculo + -ferous.] Zoöl. Having oscules.

os'cu-lin-flec'tion. o'e'u-lin-flex'ion (ŏs'kūl-), n. [osculation + inflection, inflexion.] Math. The combination of a double cusp with a point of inflection, the cusp being of different species on opposite sides of the point called point of osculinflection (Cramer).

os'cu-ran'tist (ŏs'kū-răn'tĭst), n. [L. oscurantista.] An obscurantist. Rare.

Os-set'ic (ŏ-sĕt'ĭk), a. Of or pert. to the Ossets. —n. The language of the Ossets, closely related to Iranian. It employs both the Russian and the Armenian alphabets. See INDO-EUROPEAN.

Os'sian (ŏsh'ăn), n. [Gael. Oisin, dim. fr. os a fawn.] A legendary Gaelic bard and hero of the 3d century. See FENIAN, 1.

Os'si-an'ic (ŏsh'ĭ-ăn'ĭk; ŏs'ĭ- ; 277), a. Of or pert. to Ossian or the cycle of tales and poems (the latter chiefly fragmentary or late) dealing with him and his father, Finn ; esp., pertaining to, designating, or resembling, the poetry or rhythmic prose published in 1762 and 1763 by James Macpherson, and purporting to be a translation of poems of Ossian. Macpherson's work, based in part on genuine Celtic fragments, is characterized esp. by descriptions of wild scenery, and, in spite of its grandiloquence and monotony, has considerable romantic charm.

os'si-cle (ŏs'ĭ-k'l), n. [L. ossiculum, dim. of os, ossis, a bone.] Anat. & Zoöl. A little bone or part resembling a small bone ; as : a The malleus, incus, or stapes of the ear. b One of the small plates of bone in the sclerotic of some reptiles and birds. c One of the numerous small calcareous pieces of the auditory sac of many echinoderms. d One of the parts of the gastric mill of the stomach of some crustaceans.

os'si-fi-ca'tion (-fĭ-kā'shŭn), n. [Cf. F. ossification. See OSSIFY.] Physiol. 1. The formation of bone; the state or process of being converted into bone. Ossification begins at one or more points (called centers of ossification) for each future bone and is accomplished by mesoblastic cells called osteoblasts, which deposit the inorganic bone substance about themselves, becoming the bone corpuscles of the completed bone. Ossification may take place in membrane (intermembranous ossification), that is, in connective tissue (see MEMBRANE BONE), or in cartilage (endochondral, or intercartilaginous, ossification). The latter is much the more complex process, involving the calcification (by deposition of lime salts) of the matrix of the cartilage, and its subsequent absorption and replacement by true but spongy bony tissue, which, in the interior of the limb bones, is mostly finally absorbed to form the marrow cavity, the bone meanwhile increasing in size by layers of bony tissue deposited on the outside under the periosteum.
2. That which is ossified ; a bone.
3. The state of being changed into a bony substance ; also, a mass or point of ossified tissue.

os'si-fied (ŏs'ĭ-fīd), p. a. Changed to bone or something resembling bone ; hardened by deposits of mineral matter of any kind ; —said of tissues.

os-sif'lu-ent (ŏ-sĭf'lōō-ĕnt), a. [L. os, ossis, a bone + fluens, -entis, p. pr. of fluere to flow.] Med. Coming from diseased bone ; —said of a discharge from a fistula.

os'si-form (ŏs'ĭ-fôrm), a. [L. os, ossis, bone + -form.] Having the appearance of bone; osseous.

os-sif'ra-gous (ŏ-sĭf'rā-gŭs), a. [L. ossifragus. See OSSIFRAGE.] Serving to break bones ; bone-breaking.

os'si-fy (ŏs'ĭ-fī), v. i. or t. ; OS'SI-FIED (-fīd) ; OS'SI-FY'ING (-fī'ĭng). [L. os, ossis, bone + -fy : cf. F. ossifier. See OSSEOUS.] 1. Physiol. To form or change into bone. See OSSIFICATION.
2. Fig. : To harden ; as, to ossify the heart. Ruskin.

os'so-la (ŏs'ō-lă), n. pl. [NL., fr. L. osseus bony.] Zoöl. The Teleostei. —os'se-an (-ăn), a. & n.

os'se-o-al-bu'mi-noid, n. Physiol. The albuminoid of bone.

os'se-o-mu'coid, n. Physiol. The mucoid of bone.

os'se-ous-ly, adv. Physiol. As regards bones.

os'set, n. Prob., a woolen material. Obs.

Os-se'ti-an (ŏ-sē'shĭ-ăn), a. & n. = OSSETIC. [OSSETIC.]

Os-set'ish (-sē'tĭsh), n. = OSSETIC.

Os'sian-esque' (ŏsh'ăn-ĕsk'), a. After, or suggesting the style of, the Ossianic poems. See OSSIANIC. —n. Ossianesque style.

Os'sian-ism (ŏsh'ăn-ĭz'm), n. The realm of Ossianic legend and poetry.

Os'sian-ize, v. t. To make Ossianic in style or form.

os-sic'u-lar (ŏ-sĭk'ū-lär), a. Zoöl. Of, like, or pert. to ossicles.

os-sic'u-late (-lāt), -lat'ed (-lā'tĕd), a. Having ossicles.

os'si-cule (ŏs'ĭ-kūl), n. [L. os-siculum.] An ossicle. Rare.

os'si-cu-lec'to-my (ŏs'ĭ-kū-lĕk'tō-mĭ), n. [See OSSICLE ; -ECTOMY.] Surg. Excision of an auditory ossicle.

os-sic'u-lum (ŏ-sĭk'ū-lŭm), n. ; L. pl. -LA (-lă). [L.] 1. Zoöl. = An ossicle. b A lithodesma.
2. Bot. An ossiculus, or pyrene.

os-sic'u-lus, n. [NL., dim. of L. os bone, stone of a fruit.] Bot. A pyrene. Obs.

os-sif'er-ous (ŏ-sĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. [L. os, ossis, a bone + -ferous.] Containing bone or bones.

os-siv'o-rous (ŏ-sĭv'ō-rŭs), a. [L. os, ossis, bone + -vorous.] Feeding on bones.

Gr. ὀστρακώδης testaceous.] Zoöl. An order of small, active, mostly fresh-water Entomostraca having the body more or less completely inclosed in a bivalve shell composed of right and left valves. Their body is unsegmented, their abdomen rudimentary, and they have only seven pairs of appendages. — os'tra-code (ŏs'trā-kōd), a. & n.

One of the Ostracoda (Cypridina). Side view of Male, × about 50; a a' Antennæ; b Brain; c Simple Eye; e Compound Eye; h Heart; m Muscle; r Testis; t Tail.

Os'tra-coph'o-ri (-kŏf'ō-rī), n. pl. [NL.; Gr. ὀστρακον shell + φορός bearing.] Paleon. A class of remarkable extinct fishes or fishlike animals known only from imperfect remains found in Ordovician, Silurian, and Devonian rocks. Jaws and paired fins homologous with those of recent fishes and also limb girdles appear to be wanting. The backbone was represented by a persistent, imperfectly segmented notochord. In most cases the anterior part of the body was enveloped in bony armor, and is often very broad, while the posterior part was slender and scaly, ending in a heterocercal tail. The orders Heterostraci, Osteostraci, Anaspida, and Antiarcha, are usually included, but the last is perhaps more nearly related to the Arthrodira. See CEPHALASPIS, PTERASPIS, PTERICHTHYODES.

Os'tra-ea (ŏs'trē-ă), n. [L., an oyster.] Zoöl. The genus of bivalve Mollusca which includes the true oysters. It is the type of a family, Os-tre'i-dæ (ŏs-trē'ĭ-dē). See OYSTER. — os'tre-a'ceous (ŏs'trē-ā'shŭs), a.

os'tre-i-form' (ŏs'trē-ĭ-fôrm'; ŏs-trē'ĭ-fôrm), a. [Ostrea + -form.] Zoöl. Shaped like an oyster; oysterlike.

os'trich (ŏs'trĭch), n. [ME. ostriche, ostrice, OF. ostruche, ostruce, F. autruche, L. avis struthio; avis bird + struthio ostrich, fr. Gr. στρουθών, fr. στρουθός bird, sparrow. Cf. AVIARY; STRUTHIOUS.] a A ratite bird of the genus Struthio; esp., S. camelus of arid parts of northern Africa, the largest of existing birds, attaining a height of six or eight feet and a weight of 300 lbs. Ostriches are very swift-footed, but the wings are small and useless for flight. The head and neck are downy, the body covered with soft feathers, the thighs nearly bare, and the feet two-toed. In the male the body plumage is black and the wings and tail white. The female and young male are grayish. The value of its plumes, esp. those of the wings and tail, has led to its domestication. The ostrich (S. australis) of southern Africa and that (S. molybdophanes) of eastern Africa are regarded as distinct species. b By extension, a rhea.

Ostrich (Struthio camelus).

ostrich fern. A tall polypodiaceous fern (Matteuccia struthiopteris) with graceful arched bipinnatifid fronds growing in a circle from an erect rootstock. The sporophylls are pinnate with necklacelike segments, and resemble small ostrich plumes.

Os'tro-goth (ŏs'trō-gŏth), n. [L. Ostrogothi, pl.; cf. OHG. ôstar eastward. See EAST; GOTH.] One of the East Goths. See GOTH, 1. — Os'tro-goth'ic (-gŏth'ĭk), a.

Os'try-a (ŏs'trĭ-ă), n. [L., a kind of tree with hard wood, Gr. ὀστρύα.] Bot. A genus of betulaceous trees, the hop hornbeams, containing one European and two North American species. They are distinguished from the true hornbeam (Carpinus) by the conelike fruit with membranous inflated bracts. See IRONWOOD b.

Ost'wald's di-lu'tion law (ŏst'vălts). [After W. Ostwald (b. 1853), German physicist.] Phys. Chem. The law that, in a solution of an electrolyte, the square of the number of moles ionized, divided by the number of moles not ionized, varies directly as the dilution.

Os'ty-ak, Os'ti-ak (ŏs'tĭ-ăk), n. 1. A member of any of a group of Finnic peoples of the Ural mountain regions and western Siberia, esp. along the Obi River and the Irtysh River. They are of a mixed type, having both Mongolian and Caucasian traits, though the latter predominate. They are mostly nomadic hunters and fishers.

2. The language of the Ostyaks. See FINNO-UGRIC.

Os-we'go tea (ŏs-wē'gō). An American mint (Monarda didyma), with showy, bright scarlet flowers.

O'ta-hei'te (ō'tä-hē'tē), n. One of the Society Islands; — now usually called Tahiti. — Otaheite apple. a A Polynesian anacardiaceous tree (Spondias dulcis); also, its fruit, which is larger than an apple, with a rind having the flavor of turpentine, and a sweet edible flesh. b The Malay apple. — O. chestnut, the Polynesian chestnut. — O. gooseberry, a tropical African and Asiatic euphorbiaceous plant (Phyllanthus distichus); also, its acid fruit, which is eaten raw or cooked. — O. mulberry, the paper mulberry. — O. myrtle, any euphorbiaceous plant of the genus Securinega. — O. orange, a dwarf orange considered by some to be a variety of the sweet orange, by others a hybrid between the orange and lemon, its foliage resembling that of the latter. It is much cultivated in pots for indoor decoration. — O. salep. = PIA. — O. walnut, the candlenut Aleurites moluccana.

o-tal'gi-a (ō-tăl'jĭ-ă), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ὠταλγία; οὖς, ὠτός, the ear + ἄλγος pain.] Med. Pain in the ear; earache.

o-tal'gic (-jĭk), a. Med. Of or pertaining to otalgia. — n. A remedy for otalgia.

O'ta-rĭ'i-dæ (ō'tä-rĭ'ĭ-dē; ŏt'ä-), n. pl. [NL., fr. Gr. ὠτ-άρός large-eared, fr. οὖς, ὠτός, ear.] Zoöl. The family of pinnipeds consisting of the eared seals, sea lions, sea bears, etc. Sometimes ranked as a subfamily, O-ta'rĭ-i'næ (ō-tăr'ĭ-ī'nē). O-ta'rĭ-a (ō-tā'rĭ-ă; 115) is the typical genus.

See EARED SEAL. — o'ta-rine (ō'tä-rĭn; -rīn), o-ta'ri-ine (ō-tă'rĭ-ĭn; -īn), a. — o-ta'ri-oid (-oid), a. & n.

-ote. Petrog. See PETROGRAPHY.

o-thæ'ma-to'ma, o-the'ma-to'ma (ō-thē'mă-tō'mă), n.; L. pl. -TOMATA (-mă-tă). [NL. See OTO-; HÆMATOMA.] Med. Hæmatoma in the external ear, oftenest seen in the insane.

O-thel'lo (ō-thĕl'ō), n. In Shakespeare's tragedy of the same name, a noble-spirited Moor who has won honor in the military service of Venice, and marries a senator's daughter, Desdemona. He is led by the malignant villain Iago to believe her unfaithful, and smothers her to death before learning of her innocence, after which he kills himself.

o'the-o-scope' (ō'thē-ō-skōp'), n. [Gr. ὠθεῖν to push + -scope.] Physics. An instrument for exhibiting the repulsive action produced by light or heat in an exhausted vessel; a modification of the radiometer.

oth'er (ŭth'ĕr), a. [AS. ōðer one of two, either, the second of two, other; akin to OS. ăðar, ōðar, D. & G. ander, OHG. andar, Icel. annarr, Sw. annan, Dan. anden, Goth. anþar, Skr. antara. cf. L. alter; all orig. comparatives: cf. Skr. anya other. Cf. ALTER.] 1. (That) which remains of two, as distinguished from that which is specified; (the) remaining; — often with a plural word, and usually preceded by a demonstrative or possessive word; as, his other friend; the other sons.

One half of the world knoweth not how the other half liveth. Rabelais (trans.).

2. Second. Obs., except in: every other, every second or alternate; as, every other day.

3. Additional; not the same; different. Other, meaning "different in identity," is often construed with than; as, gifts other than flowers; when meaning "different in quality or kind" it may take than or from; as, hardly other than bad; a nature far other from ours; in both senses other formerly also took but. Its redundant use to qualify a word denoting a thing different in kind from that previously mentioned is obsolete; thus, "All these [vices] are portable, with other graces weighed." Shak. It is still similarly used before a contrastive adjective which is marked by stress as parenthetical; as, a good man, and other, sinful, men.

Other lords beside thee have had dominion over us. Is. xxvi. 13.

For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid. 1 Cor. iii. 11.

The whole seven years of . . . ignominy had been little other than a preparation for this very hour. Hawthorne.

4. Left, as opposed to right. Obs.

other people's money. See O. P. MONEY. — o. some, some others. Obs. or Dial. Eng. — the o. day. a The second or next day. Obs. b A day ago. Obs. c A day not long ago; — usually adverbial; as, I saw him the other day. — the o. world, the world beyond the grave; the spirit world.

oth'er, adv. Otherwise. "If you think other." Shak.

oth'er, pron. 1. (pl. formerly OTHER, now OTHERS (-ĕrz)) One or ones remaining; part remaining; — the substantive use of other, adj., 1. Other (sing.) is now preceded by the or a demonstrative or possessive word, but was formerly used alone as correlative to each (cf. EACH OTHER), either, neither, whether; and as meaning "each preceding one"; as in, "Controversy, which I am less fond of every day than other." Tillotson.

Each of them made other for to win. Chaucer.

Whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. Matt. v. 39.

And some fell among thorns . . . but other fell into good ground. Matt. xiii. 7, 8.

If he is trimming, others are true. Thackeray.

2. Second. Obs. Cf. OTHER, a., 2.

3. (pl. OTHER, Archaic; OTHERS) A different or additional one; — the substantive use of OTHER, a., 3. Other (sing.) in this sense is now used alone only in the correlative expressions: some . . . or other; one . . . or other; as, some person or other will be there. It generally occurs with one (cf. ANOTHER), any, no, none, some; as, no others could write. In the sense of "another thing," where the noun cannot be supplied from the context other is archaic; as in, he could not find other than falsehood. Cf. also OTHER, a., 3. "All other of the same class." Froude. "One or other of the club." Addison.

No other but such a one as he. Coleridge.

4. Each other; one another. Now Only Scot.

oth'er, conj. [See OR.] Or; either; also (Rare), whether; — often used with other or or for its correlative (as either . . . or is now used). Obs. Chaucer.

oth'er, n. Philos. That which exists as an opposite of, or as excluded by, something else; as, the non-ego is the other of the ego, nonbeing the other of being, the objective world is the other of self-consciousness. Cf. ALTER.

oth'er-gates' (-gāts'), adv. [other + gate way. See -WARDS.] In another manner. Obs. or Dial. Eng. — a. Different. Obs.

oth'er-guise' (-gīz'), oth'er-guess' (-gĕs'), a. & adv. [Corrupt. of othergates.] Of another kind or sort; in another way. Obs. or Archaic.

out-. [See OUT, adv.] A combining form used chiefly in the senses of the adverb (although, esp. in 2 b below, there is an extension of meaning not found in the purely adverbial uses). The chief meanings (in which the combinations are indefinitely numerous) are : 1. (primary accent regularly on out-, as out'gō') ; in adverbs the accent is variable, cf. OUTDOORS). With nouns and adjectives : a Situated or placed near or beyond the boundaries, or belonging to that which is so situated ; — as, specif. : beyond the walls or immediate boundaries ; exterior ; external ; outside ; as in outgarment, outhouse, outstair ; out of or outside of (what is designated) ; as in outdoor ; remote from the center ; distant ; as in outdistrict, outfield ; residing, journeying, or employed outside or abroad ; as in outclerk, out-patient, outpupil ; foreign ; as in outcity, outmerchant, out-people. b Away from the center or source ; forth ; outward ; — generally with the idea of motion, trend, extension, or direction ; as in outbound, outbranching, outgoing, outvoyage ; specif. : leading or opening outward ; as in outpath, outlet ; projecting or inclining outward ; as in outlipped, outbowed.
2. (primary accent regularly on verbal element, as out-gō') With verbs : a As a separable prefix, the combination being equivalent to the verb followed by out (chiefly nonce words, now mostly poetic) ; as, specif. : forth ; out ; away ; as in outflow ; outhurl ; outward ; as in outlengthen ; out of place, being, content, etc. ; as in outwrench, outblot, outquaff ; forth into being or manifestation ; as in outshape, outferret ; to the full extent ; to the limit ; completely ; as in outwear ; to the elimination or ejection of ; as in outawe, outgloom, outhiss, outjest. b As an inseparable prefix, with verbs or with adjectives or nouns converted to verbal use, implying a going or passing beyond in the quality or action named by the second element ; an exceeding, excelling, surpassing, beating, in the respect considered ; as, specif. : in respect to time, outlast, outlive ; in respect to space, outreach, outpass ; in respect to any action, with reference to a competitor, outbrag, outdo, outfawn ; hence, in respect to a contest, out bid, *out*bargain, *out*jockey. In respect to an action, quality, or character, as implying an excessive degree of it, forms tions with out- are used either : without special qualification ; as, "this result *out*satisfies my wish ;" or, in an idiom common since the 16th century, by repeating the second element of the compound as a direct object ; as, to out-Herod Herod, to *out*bake the baker. c As an inseparable prefix, with the force of dis- ; — chiefly in nonce words.

out'law'ry (-rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). Act of outlawing; act or process of putting a man out of the protection of law; hence, formerly, banishment; exile. In the later times outlawry in civil cases, including contempt of court, incapacitated the outlaw from bringing an action in the courts, but did not deprive him of the right of self-defense. Civil outlawry was abolished by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 59, 1879, having been long obsolete; and criminal outlawry has been in practical abeyance since 1859, though still legally possible. Outlawry is entirely obsolete in the United States, and it is doubtful if it has been employed since the Revolution. In Scotland, when the accused is absent on the day on which he is summoned to appear and stand trial in the High Court, sentence of outlawry or fugitation is pronounced against him (cf. ATTAINDER, 1; CAPUT LUPINUM; FORFEITURE, 1 b; ESCHEAT, 1; EXACT, v. t., 5; etc.). Outlawry was at first a declaration of war by the community upon one who defied its constituted authority. As a common enemy his goods were forfeit and every man was at liberty, and even bound, to kill him at sight. Later it became a substantive punishment for crime, and finally a mere process designed to bring one into the jurisdiction of the courts in either criminal or civil cases. The penalties and disabilities attached to it varied, but after the 13th century wanton killing of the outlaw was not permitted.

o'va-ry (ō'vă-rĭ), n.; pl. -RIES (-rĭz). [NL. ovarium, fr. L. ovum egg. See OVAL.] 1. Anat. & Zoöl. The essential female reproductive gland or organ; the organ in which the eggs are produced. The corresponding male organ is the testis. In vertebrates there are commonly a pair of ovaries which develop from an outgrowth (the genital ridge) of each Wolffian body, and are hence of mesoblastic origin. In birds only one ovary is usually functional. The adult human ovaries are oval flattened organs about an inch and a half long lying in the broad ligaments one on each side of the uterus. They are composed of a fibrous vascular stroma in which are embedded the Graafian follicles (containing the eggs), and are invested externally with a condensed layer of the stroma, the tunica albuginea, and a layer of columnar cells (the germinal epithelium, which see) continuous with the peritoneum. The eggs are discharged by the bursting of the Graafian follicles on the surface of the ovary; the eggs passing out into the body cavity, though they are immediately received into the mouth of the ovi-duct (see FALLOPIAN TUBE). In most teleost fishes and many invertebrates (as arthropods) the ovaries have an internal cavity directly continuous with an oviduct.

2. Bot. In angiospermous plants, an enlarged (usually the basal) portion of the pistil or gynœcium, containing ovules. Morphologically the ovary is a closed sac consisting of a single sporophyll or carpel (simple, or monocarpellary, ovary), or of several carpels (compound, or polycarpellary, ovary), the ovules being borne on the inner margins or placentæ. The separate cavities of a compound ovary are called loculi or cells. Such ovaries frequently exhibit additional (false) septa or dissepiments. (See PLACENTATION.) With respect to the calyx the ovary may be wholly free (superior) or more or less coalescent (inferior). See GYNŒCIUM, CARPEL.

Cf. ABOVE, EAVES, HYPER-, ORLOP, SUPER-, SOVEREIGN, UP.] 1. Above, or higher than, in place or position, often with the idea of covering; — opposed to under; as, clouds are over our heads; the smoke rises over the city; over head and ears in debt. Also with the idea of being occupied with; as, they made merry over their cups.

The mercy seat that is over the testimony. Ex. xxx. 6.

2. Above; — implying superiority as to authority, power, dignity, value, preference, etc.; as, to have an advantage over one; to triumph over difficulties. It often implies government, responsibility, etc.

I will make thee ruler over many things. Matt. xxv. 23.
Dost thou not watch over my sin? Job xiv. 16.

3. Above or beyond in amount or degree; more than; as, it cost over five dollars. "Over all this." Chaucer.

☞ Over in this sense may often be regarded either as preposition or adverb (cf., it cost nearly five dollars), according as it is felt to govern a noun or to qualify an adjective or verb.

4. Upon the surface of; upon; — often with the idea of covering the whole surface of; hither and thither upon; throughout; as, to wander over the earth; to walk over a field.

5. Throughout or during the time of; from beginning to end of; as, to keep anything over night. Formerly also, specif., on or during the preceding (evening or night); — now only in over night. See OVERNIGHT.

6. Further than; besides; — now generally Obs., except in over and above (which see).

7. Across; from side to side of; — implying a passing or moving, either above the substance or thing, or on the surface of it; as, a dog leaps over a stream or a table.

Certain lakes . . . poison birds which fly over them. Bacon.

8. Contrary to. Obs. Wycliffe.

9. Beyond or after (in time). Obs. or Dial.

☞ In the sense of throughout, whether of space or time, over often follows its nouns, and may be construed as an adverb; as in, he searched the country over.

over all. a Everywhere. Obs. Chaucer. b Her. Placed upon other charges, etc.; — said of a charge, ordinary, or escutcheon. Cf. EN SURTOUT. c Naut. From the extreme forward point to the extreme after point of the deck, including overhangs; — said of the length of a vessel. d From one extreme point to another of anything, including any projections; — said of a dimension. — o. and above. See under OVER, adv. (below). — o. signature, name, etc., having one's signature, etc., subscribed to the writing; — a substitute for the idiomatic English form, under his signature (name, hand and seal, etc.), the reference in the latter form being to the authority under which the writing is made, executed, or published, and not to the place of the autograph, etc. — o. the side, Naut., from outside a vessel on to the deck, as in arriving on board, or from the deck to outside the vessel, as in leaving.

o'ver (ō'vẽr), adv. 1. To the other side; from one side to another across a space or barrier; as, to sail over to England; to hand over the money; to go over to the enemy. "We will pass over to Gibeah." Judges xix. 12. Also, at, or on, the opposite side; as, the ferryboat is over.

2. Specif.: a From inside to outside across the brim. Good measure, pressed down . . . and running over. Luke vi. 38. b Beyond or away from the perpendicular; as, to fall over. c So as to face oppositely; in a manner to bring the under side to or towards the top; as, to turn (one's self) over; to roll a stone over; to turn over the leaves. d From side to side; across; — in expressions of measurement; as, a tree one foot over, i. e., in diameter.

3. Above; as, the balloon was directly over. In this use over may often be regarded as the preposition with its governed noun understood.

4. Beyond or above a certain quantity or limit; as, a few left over; hence, in excess. "So over violent." Dryden.
He that gathered much had nothing over. Ex. xvi. 18.

5. From beginning to end; throughout the course, extent, or expanse of anything; as, to look over accounts, or a stock of goods; a dress covered over with jewels.

6. At an end; beyond the limit of continuance; completed; finished. "Their distress was over." Macaulay.

7. Again; — denoting repetition; as, to do the work over.

over again, once more; with repetition; afresh; anew. — o. and over, repeatedly; again and again.

o'ver (ō'vẽr), a. [Cf. AS. uferra, compar. See ABOVE, OVER, prep. & adv.] Upper; covering; higher; superior; also, excessive; surplus; — now chiefly used in composition; as, overshoes, overcoat, overgarment, overlord, overwork, overhaste. See OVER-, prefix. — over burden. See 2d BURDEN, 8. — o. in the knees, Far., knee-sprung.

o'ver, n. 1. Something excessive; an excess. Rare. 2. That which goes or is over; specif., a throw, or the like, that goes over or beyond that which is aimed at (see 4th CRICKET, n.). Chiefly Cant. 3. A thing made or given in addition to a set number; as, the overs, or extra impressions, of a printed job.

o'ver (ō'vẽr), v. t.; o'VERED (-vẽrd); o'VER-ING. [From OVER, adv.] 1. To raise (in amount). Obs. 2. To leap over or to go over. 3. To overcome. Scot. 4. To recover from. Dial. Eng. 5. To be over with; as, the harvest is overed. Dial. Eng.

o'ver- (ō'vẽr-; see note below). A combining form used in the chief senses of the adverb and the preposition and in certain complex senses apparently formed either by composition of the simpler senses or analogically with respect to them. The principal meanings (4 c being far the most common, formations with this sense being indefinitely numerous) are: 1. Above; specif.: a Situated, extending, or moving above; as, the overarching sky; the overworld. b Operating, directed, or coming, from above; down toward or upon, from above; as, an overbending tree; to overlook a valley. c On the outside or surface; covering or traversing the surface; as, an overclouded sky; overgrown with brush; overrun by invaders; an overcoat. d Above, or acting above, in degree, quality, station, or function; as, musical overtones; an overlord; to overoffice, that is, "hold or exercise office over." e Above, or reaching above, the top, or beyond the normal bound or capacity; as, an overflowing cup.

2. Across; specif.: a From limit to limit or from extremity to extremity; as, to overfestoon. b Through the extent; through or throughout; to the end; as, to overname the exploits of a hero. c Beyond; on the other side of; as, he is oversea. d Across the border or bound; from one side to the other; as, to overbribe, that is, "bribe over."

3. Hence: a Across and above or across above; either, across upon the surface; as, overglide; or, across at a height or overhead; as, overleap. b Across, or through, and more; through and beyond; as, to overstay.

4. Above or beyond in degree; specif.: a More than; to a degree beyond or in excess; as, overbalance; overtime; hence, so as to exceed or surpass; as, to overbid; to overplot; also (probably with some reference to 1 b), so as to defeat or get the better, as by descending upon, forcing down, outdoing, etc.; as, to overbear, overthrow, overawe. b To a great or surpassing degree; abundantly or surpassingly; as, overglorious. c To an excessive degree; excessive or to excess; too; too much; as, to overdo; overheat.

5. Again; in repetition; as, oversay, that is, "say over."

☞ The accentuation in compounds of over-, esp. the adjectives, often varies with the sense and the position of the word. In many cases where even accent (—ˈ—) is indicated, as in o'ver-greed'y, either stress may be somewhat subordinated according to the construction or emphasis; as, an o'ver-greed'y boy; the boy is o'ver-greed'y, or o'ver-greed'y. Corresponding adverbs, and nouns in -ness, usually have slightly heavier accent on the second element, as o'ver-greed'i-ly, o'ver-cau'tious-ness. See Guide, § 81.

o'ver-a-bound' (ō'vẽr-ȧ-bound'), v. i. 1. To be exceedingly plenty or superabundant. Pope. 2. To be too abundant; to abound too much.

o'ver-act' (-ăkt'), v. t. 1. To act or perform to excess, as a part; to exaggerate in acting. 2. To outdo in acting; also, to act over. Obs. 3. To act upon, or influence, unduly. Obs. 4. To act beyond the limits of. Rare.

o'ver-act', v. i. To act more than is necessary; to go to excess in action; to overact a part. B. Jonson.

o'ver-all', a. Including everything; taking everything into account; as, over-all length; over-all efficiency.

o'ver-all' (ō'vẽr-ôl'), n. An outer garment, esp. one for rough wear or for wear in bad weather. Cf. OVERALLS.

o'ver-alls' (-ôlz'), n. pl. 1. A kind of loose trousers worn over others as a protection from soiling, wear, or weather. 2. Waterproof leggings. R. D. Blackmore.

o'ver-arch' (-ärch'), v. t. & i. To make or place an arch over; to arch over.

o'ver-arm', a. Cricket, etc. Done (as bowling or pitching) with the arm raised above the shoulder.

o'ver-awe' (ō'vẽr-ô'), v. t.; o'VER-AWED' (-ôd'); o'VER-AW'ING (-ô'ĭng). To subjugate or restrain by awe or fear.

o'ver-bal'ance (-băl'ăns), v. t. 1. To exceed equality with; to outweigh. 2. To cause to lose balance or equilibrium.

o'ver-bal'ance, v. i. To prevail by dint of greater weight or power.

o'ver-bal'ance, n. 1. Excess of weight or value; a thing more than an equivalent; as, an overbalance of exports. 2. That which overbalances something. 3. A state of ill balance, due to exaggeration or ill-apportioned emphasis.

Who is fittest to stand up and . . . correct its overbalance into religion? J. Martineau.

Syn. — Overwhelm, crush, overpower, overcome, defeat, discomfit, vanquish, rout, beat; demolish, destroy, ruin; overset. — OVERTURN, OVERTHROW, SUBVERT, UPSET. OVERTHROW commonly suggests greater violence or more overwhelming ruin or defeat than OVERTURN; but the two words are often used with little or no distinction; as, "He knoweth their works, and he overturneth them in the night" (Job xxxiv. 25); "Like the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah . . . which the Lord overthrew in his anger, and in his wrath" (Deut. xxix. 23). To SUBVERT is to overturn as from the foundations; the word sometimes implies an insidious or corrupting influence; as, "There is not any other medicine . . . so likely to subvert that gloomy empire of the spleen" (Berkeley); "Temptation and all guile on him to try — so to subvert whom he suspected" (Milton). UPSET is more familiar and colloquial; as, to upset one's plans, to upset one's composure, to upset an argument. See CONQUER, DESTROY, REVERSE.

O-vid'i-an, a. Of or pert. to the Latin poet Ovid (Publius Ovidius Naso, B. C. 43–A. D. 17), or resembling his style, which is characterized by imaginative vividness and vivacity rather than by serious purpose.

O-vid'i-an, n. A disciple of Ovid, esp. in allusion to his treatise De Arte Amandi.

o'vi-du'cal (ō'vĭ-dū'kăl), a. [See OVIDUCT.] Anat. Of or pertaining to oviducts; as, oviducal glands.

o'vi-duct (ō'vĭ-dŭkt), n. [See OVUM; DUCT.] Anat. & Zoöl. A tube or duct serving exclusively or especially for the passage of the eggs from the ovary to the exterior of the animal or to some part communicating with the exterior. The structures so serving are not necessarily homologous in different groups of animals, and may be directly continuous with the ovary, or entirely distinct from it, receiving the eggs only after their discharge into the body cavity. Portions of the oviduct are often modified into glandular organs for secreting a shell or other covering for the eggs, or a part may be modified to form a uterus in which the eggs or embryos develop. The oviducts in mammals are called Fallopian tubes (which see), though, morphologically considered, the Fallopian tubes represent only a part of the oviducal canals, the uterus and vagina being their continuation.

o-vif'er-ous (ō-vĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. [ovi- + -ferous.] Biol. Egg-bearing; serving to hold or carry the eggs.

o'vi-form (ō'vĭ-fôrm), a. [ovi- + -form.] Egg-shaped.

o'vi-form, a. Resembling a sheep.

o-vig'e-nous (ō-vĭj'ē-nŭs), a. [ovi- + -genous.] Zoöl. Producing eggs.

o-vig'er-ous (ō-vĭj'ẽr-ŭs), a. [ovi- + -gerous.] Zoöl. Bearing eggs; oviferous.

o'vine (ō'vīn; -vĭn; 277: cf. BOVINE), a. [L. ovinus, fr. ovis sheep.] Designating, or pertaining to, sheep; sheeplike.

o'vi-par'i-ty (ō'vĭ-păr'ĭ-tĭ), n. [See OVIPAROUS.] Zoöl. Condition of being oviparous.

o-vip'a-rous (ō-vĭp'ă-rŭs), a. [L. oviparus; ovum egg + parere to bring forth.] Zoöl. Producing eggs that hatch after exclusion from the body; also, designating this form of reproduction; — contrasted with viviparous. Cf. OVOVIVIPAROUS. — o-vip'a-rous-ly, adv. — o-vip'a-rous-ness, n.

o'vi-pos'it (ō'vĭ-pŏz'ĭt), v. i.; o'vi-pos'it-ed; o'vi-pos'it-ing. [See OVUM; POSIT.] To lay eggs; — said esp. of insects. — o'vi-po-si'tion (-pō-zĭsh'ŭn), n.

o'vi-pos'i-tor (-pŏz'ĭ-tẽr), n. [L. ovum an egg + positor a placer, fr. ponere to place.] Zoöl. A specialized organ for depositing eggs in a position suitable for their development. Such an organ is frequent in insects, consisting of three pairs of unjointed styles at the end of the abdomen of the female. The styles are closely fitted together and form a boring apparatus with which a hole (in the ground, in plants, etc.) is made, in which one or more eggs may be placed. The sting of bees and wasps is a modified ovipositor. In some fishes a fleshy, tubular prolongation of the genital orifice serves as an ovipositor.

a Ovipositor of Ichneumon Fly (Pimpla).

o'vi-sac (ō'vĭ-săk), n. a Zoöl. A capsule containing an egg or eggs; an ovicapsule. b Anat. A Graafian follicle.

o'vism (ō'vĭz'm), n. [ovi- + -ism.] Zoöl. The old theory that the egg contains the whole embryo of the future organism and the germs of all subsequent offsprings and is merely awakened to activity by the spermatozoön; — opposed to spermism or animalculism.

o'vist (ō'vĭst), n. Zoöl. A believer in ovism.

o-viv'o-rous (ō-vĭv'ō-rŭs), a. [ovi- + -vorous.] Feeding on eggs; egg-devouring.

o'vo-. A combining form for ovum.

o'void (ō'void), a. [ovo- + -oid.] Resembling an egg in shape; egg-shaped; ovate; as, an ovoid apple; specif., Bot., egg-shaped with the large end towards the point of attachment.

o'void, n. An ovoid body.

o'vo-lo (ō'vō-lō), n.; pl. ovoli (-lē). [It. ovolo, uovolo, fr. L. ovum an egg. Cf. OVULE.] Arch. A rounded, convex molding. See MOLDING, Illust. In Roman work it is usually a quarter circle in section; in Greek work it is flatter, and is equivalent to the echinus (which see). In medieval architecture it is not distinguishable from the multitude of convex moldings, of all sections, which are used.

o'vo-vi-vip'a-rous (ō'vō-vī-vĭp'ă-rŭs), a. [ovo- + viviparous: cf. F. ovovivipare.] Zoöl. Producing eggs that have a well-developed shell or covering, as in oviparous animals, but which hatch within the body of the parent, as in the case of many reptiles and elasmobranch fishes. The marsupials, which resemble oviparous animals in forming no placenta, have been described as ovoviviparous. — o'vo-vi-vip'a-rism (-rĭz'm), o'vo-viv'i-par'i-ty (-vĭv'ĭ-păr'ĭ-tĭ), o'vo-vi-vip'a-rous-ness (-vī-vĭp'ă-rŭs-nĕs), n. — o'vo-vi-vip'a-rous-ly, adv.

o'vu-lar (ō'vū-lẽr), a. Bot. & Zoöl. Pertaining to, or of the nature of, an ovule; as, an ovular growth.

o'vu-late (ō'vū-lāt), v. i.; o'vu-lat'ed (-lā't/ĕd); o'vu-lat'ing (-lā't/ĭng). Biol. To produce eggs or ovules, or discharge them from an ovary.

o'vu-la'tion (-lā'shŭn), n. Biol. The formation of eggs in the ovary; the discharge of the egg or eggs from the ovary.

o'vule (ō'vūl), n. [Dim. of L. ovum an egg: cf. F. ovule. Cf. OVOLO, OVULUM.] 1. Bot. The megasporangium of a seed plant; popularly, an immature seed. It consists of a central mass of tissue, the nucellus (n in the Illust.), containing a single megaspore, the embryo sac (e), within which is the egg cell. The coat or integument of an ovule is usually double (primine and secundine) with a minute orifice (foramen) leading to an aperture (micropyle) through which the pollen tube usually penetrates at the time of fertilization. The point of attachment of the ovule to its support (placenta) is called the hilum; sometimes it has a slender stalk, or funicle (f). The nucellus and its integuments are closely connected at a point termed the chalaza (c). With respect to the position it assumes during growth the ovule may be orthotropous (a in cut), anatropous, campylotropous, amphitropous. See these words, also EMBRYO, 2, SEED.

Diagrammatic Section of Ovule of an Angiosperm. p, p Primine, and s, s Secundine, Integuments; m Micropyle.

2. A small egg; an egg in an early stage of growth.

o'vules of Na'both (ō'vūlz ŏv nā'bŏth) [after M. Naboth (1675–1721), Ger. anatomist], Anat., small cysts, prob. occluded mucous glands, in the lining of the cervix of the uterus.

o'vum (ō'vŭm), n. [L., an egg. See OVAL.] 1. Biol. A female germ cell; an egg cell, or egg, in the biological sense of that word. In animals it is a cell produced in the female reproductive organ or ovary, which is capable of developing into an organism inheriting more or less completely the characters of its ancestors, but it is commonly able to accomplish this only after it has undergone a process of maturation, and of fertilization, or fusion with a corresponding male, or sperm, cell. See FERTILIZATION, 2; PARTHENOGENESIS. The ovum differs from the sperm cell in its larger size, much larger amount of protoplasm (which usually contains nutritive yolk for the embryo), usually rounded or oval form, and lack of motility. Though the result of fertilization is a combination of the male and female germ cells, the latter so vastly exceeds the former in bulk that the term ovum or egg is still applied to the resulting cell, which may be regarded as the first stage in the life history of an individual. It is a stage in which even the most highly organized animal is temporarily in the unicellular condition characteristic of the lowest organisms, yet superior to them in having the latent capability of higher development. This development first manifests itself in repeated segmentation or cleavage of the ovum by a process of mitosis so that a mass of small cells results. In this mass the grouping of the cells into distinct germ layers (see GERM LAYER) and the beginning of their differentiation to form the various tissues soon becomes apparent. The cleavage may be total (holoblastic) or partial (meroblastic), according as the ovum contains little or much yolk. (See CLEAVAGE, 5.) In a strict sense the ovum becomes an embryo when cleavage has taken place, but the term ovum or egg is commonly still applied during the cleavage stages, and in some cases even longer, as in mammalian embryology, where the vesicle formed by the enveloping membranes of the embryo is called ovum even when the contained embryo has most of its organs already formed. In plants the ovum or egg is a nonmotile female gamete or oösphere. It is found throughout those groups in which fertilization replaces simple conjugation. Thus, while many of the lower algæ are isogamous, in the nigher forms one gamete has become greatly increased in size and has lost the power of movement, remaining passive but exerting a chemotropic attraction upon the small active gamete of the opposite sex. The same differentiation is found throughout the mosses, ferns, and seed plants, although there is increasing complexity in the mode of development of the structures. See SPORE, GAMETE.

Ovum of a Starfish (Asterias forbesii). a Cell Wall; b Cytoplasm containing Yolk Globules; n, o Germinal Vesicle; p Germinal Spot. Much enlarged.

2. Bot. a An egg cell. b An ovule. Rare.

3. Arch. An egg-shaped ornament.

owe (ō), v. t.; pret. OWED (ōd), formerly OUGHT (ôt), which, becoming specialized as a distinct verb (see OUGHT, v., 2), was replaced by owed; p. p. OWED, formerly OW'EN, which became restricted to the adj. OWN (which see), also, Obs. or Dial., OUGHT; p. pr. & vb. n. OW'ING (ō'ĭng). [ME. owen, awen, aghen, to have, own, have (to do), hence, owe, AS. āgan to have; akin to G. eigen, a., own, Icel. eiga to have, Dan. eie, Sw. äga, Goth. aigan, Skr. īç. Cf. OUGHT, v., OWN, a. & v., FRAUGHT.] 1. To own; possess. Obs.

The name thou ow'st not. Shak.

2. To have as an obligation or duty; — followed by an infinitive with or without to. Cf. OUGHT, v., 2, 3 a. Obs.

Ye owen to incline and bow your heart. Chaucer.

3. To have or be under an obligation to restore, pay, or render (something) in return or compensation for something received; to be indebted in the sum of or to be under obligation to render; as, the subject owes allegiance; the fortunate owe assistance to the unfortunate.

The one ought five hundred pence. Bible (1551).

5. To have or bear (a feeling, involving a certain type of conduct); as, to owe a grudge; to owe good or ill will.

6. To have or possess, as something derived or bestowed; to be obliged to ascribe (something to some source); to be indebted or obliged for; as, he owed his wealth to his father; he owed his victory to his lieutenants.

O deem thy fall not owed to man's decree. Pope.

7. To have or bear a character due to (a relation or quality); as, beauty owes no community with sentiment. Rare.

8. To acknowledge as one's own; to own. Obs.

☞ Various phrases with owe are entered under their respective nouns, etc.

owe (ō), v. i. 1. To be in debt; as, he owes for his house.

2. To be under obligations to some one. Obs.

ow'el (ō'ĕl), a. [OF. oel, fr. L. aequalis.] Law. Equal. Obs.

ow'el-ty (-tĭ), n. [OF. oeltè. Cf. EQUALITY.] Law. a Equality. b The amount paid or secured by one coparcener to another to equalize a partition of property.

O-we'ni-a (ō-wē'nĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., after Richard Owen, English zoölogist and anatomist.] Bot. A small genus of tropical Australian meliaceous trees having pinnate leaves, small greenish paniculed flowers, and edible acid drupaceous fruits called native plums. O. venosa (called bog onion, from its odor) yields a useful gum.

O-we'ni-an (ō-wē'nĭ-ăn), a. Of or pertaining to Robert Owen or Owenism. — n. An adherent of Owenism.

Ow'en-ism (ō'ĕn-ĭz'm), n. The political and social theories of Robert Owen (1771–1858), who advocated a communistic reorganization of society and established an industrial community on the Clyde, Scotland, and, later, a similar one in Indiana. See SOCIALISM. — Ow'en-ist, Ow'en-ite (-īt), n. — Ow'en-ize (-īz), v. t.

ow'ing (ō'ĭng), p. p. & a. [Used in a passive sense for owed. See OWE, 1. Had or held under obligation, esp. the obligation of paying; indebted; beholden; also, due to be paid or rendered; owed.

There is more owing her than is paid. Shak.

2. Had or experienced as a consequence, result, issue, etc.; ascribable; — with to; as, misfortunes are often owing to vices; his failure was owing to speculations.

owl (oul), n. [ME. oule, ule, AS. ūle; akin to D. uil, OHG. ūwila, G. eule, Icel. ugla, Sw. ugla, Dan. ugle; prob. of imitative origin. Cf. HOOT, HOWL.] 1. Any member of a well-defined group of birds of prey distinguished by their large head and large, more or less forwardly directed eyes, short, hooked bill, strong talons with reversible outer toe, very soft, fluffy, usually mottled plumage, and more or less nocturnal habits, as well as by many anatomical characters. Many species have erectile earlike tufts of feathers, and the large eyes are usually surrounded by stiffened radiating feathers (constituting the facial disk) supported by an internal bony ring. They feed on small mammals, birds, reptiles, batrachians, and insects, and with few exceptions are beneficial to man. The owls, though formerly included in the Raptores, and often divided into two families, are now usually considered as constituting a single family (Strigidæ) of the Coraciiformes. Species occur in nearly all countries.

Great Gray Owl (Scotiaptex nebulosa).

2. One of a long-established breed of fancy pigeons from which it is supposed the turbits and satinettes were derived. They have a frill on the front of the neck, and the bill is very short, with the upper mandible downwardly curved. Two principal varieties, bred in various colors, are the very small African and the larger English.

owl, v. i.; OWLED (ould); OWL'ING. 1. To hoot like an owl; also, to pry about; to prowl. Obs. or Dial. Eng.

2. To engage in owling. Obs. or Hist.

owl butterfly. A very large South American butterfly (Caligo eurylochus), which has a large ocellated spot, like an owl's eye, on each hind wing.

owl'er (oul'ẽr), n. [From OWL, v. i.] One who owls; esp., one engaged in owling. Obs. or Dial. Eng.

owl'er-y (-ĭ), n.; pl. OWLERIES (-ĭz). a An abode or a haunt of owls. b Owlish character.

owl'et (-ĕt; -ĭt), n. [Dim. of owl. Cf. HOWLET.] a The European little owl or other small owl. b A young owl.

o'vi-cap'sule, n. [ovi- + capsule.] a Zoöl. An egg case or ootheca. b Anat. The outer layer of a Graafian follicle. — o'vi-cap'su-lar (-lẽr), a.

o-vic'u-lar (ō-vĭk'ū-lẽr), a. [L. ovum an egg.] Pert. to an egg.

o-vic'u-lat'ed (ō-vĭk'ū-lāt'ĕd), a. Adorned with ovicula. Rare.

o-vic'u-lum (-lŭm), n.; pl. OVICULA (-lȧ). [NL., dim. of L. ovum egg.] Arch. An egg-shaped ornament.

o'vi-cyst (ō'vĭ-sĭst), n. [ovi- + cyst.] Zoöl. The pouch in which the eggs develop in some Tunicata. — o'vi-cys'tic (-sĭs'tĭk), a.

O'vi-dæ (ō'vĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL., fr. L. ovis sheep.] Zoöl. A family consisting of the sheep and goats, commonly ranked only as a subfamily (called Ovinæ) of the Bovidæ. [Obs.]

o'vile (ō'vĭl), a. = OVINE.

O-vil'ius (ō-vĭl'ĭ-ŭs), n. [NL., fr. L. ovillus of sheep; — in ref. to the sheep of the Hesperides, by confusion of Gr. μῆλον sheep with μῆλον apple.] Astron. Hercules; — occasional name.

O-vi'næ (ō-vī'nē), n. pl. [NL. See OVINE.] Zoöl. a A subfamily of Ovidæ consisting of the sheep, in distinction from the goats. b A subfamily of Bovidæ. See OVIDÆ.

o'vi-na'tion (ō'vĭ-nā'shŭn), n. [ovine + -ation.] Med. Inoculation with virus of sheep pox.

o-vip'a-ra (ō-vĭp'ă-rȧ), n. pl. [NL. See OVIPAROUS.] Zoöl. Oviparous animals.

ovir. † OVER.

O'vis (ō'vĭs), n. [L., sheep.] Zoöl. The genus consisting of the domestic sheep and the majority of the wild sheep.

o'vi-scapt (ō'vĭ-skăpt), n. [ovi- + Gr. σκάπτειν to dig: cf. F. ovoscapte.] An ovipositor.

ovise. † EAVES.

o'vi-sper'ma-ry (ō'vĭ-spûr'mȧ-rĭ), n. [See OVUM; SPERM semen.] Zoöl. An ovotestis.

o'vo-el-lip'tic. a. [ovo- + elliptic.] Oval, but nearly elliptic o'vo-gen'e-sis. n. [ovo- + -genesis.] Zoöl. Oögenesis. — o'vo-ge-net'ic (ō'vō-jē-nĕt'ĭk), a. — o-vog'e-nous (ō-vŏj'ē-nŭs), a.

o-voi'dal (ō-voi'dăl), a. Ovoid.

o-vol'o-gy (ō-vŏl'ō-jĭ), n. [ovo- + -logy. Cf. F. ovologie.] That branch of embryology which treats of the ovum. — o'vo-log'i-cal (ō'vō-lŏj'ĭ-kăl), a. — o-vol'o-gist (ō-vŏl'ō-jĭst), n.

o'vo-mu'coid, n. [ovo- + mucoid.] Chem. A mucoid present in the white of hen's eggs.

o'vo-plasm, n. [ovo- + -plasm, plasma.] Biol. The protoplasm of an unfertilized egg. Haeckel. — o'vo-plas'mic (-plăz'mĭk), a.

o'vo-pyr'i-form (ō'vō-pĭr'ĭ-fôrm), a. [ovo- + pyriform.] Having a form between that of a pear and an egg.

o'vo-rhom-boi'dal, a. [ovo- + rhomboidal.] Having a form combining both ovoid and rhomboid traits.

o'vo-tes'tis (-tĕs'tĭs), n. [NL. See OVUM; TESTIS.] Zoöl. A hermaphrodite reproductive organ. — o'vo-tes-tic'u-lar (-tĕs-tĭk'ū-lẽr), a. [= VITELLIN &.]

o'vo-vi-tel'lin, n. Physiol. Chem. [ovo- + vitellus.] Zoöl. An abandoned group including the marsupials and monotremes.

ovre. † OVER.

ovre, n. [AS. ōfer; akin to D. oever, G. ufer.] Border; shore; bank.

O'vu-la (ō'vū-lȧ), n. [NL. See OVULE.] Zoöl. A genus of tenioglossate gastropods of the family Cypræidæ. Cf. EGGSHELL, 2.

o'vu-la'ri-an (-lā'rĭ-ăn; -lĭ), a. Zoöl. Resembling an egg; — said of certain Protozoa.

o'vu-la-ry (ō'vū-lā-rĭ), a. Biol. Ovular. R. [an ovule or ovules.

o'vu-late (-lāt), a. Containing ovules.

o'vu-lig'er-ous (-lĭj'ẽr-ŭs), a. [ovule + -gerous.] Bot. Oviliferous. [liever in ovism.

o'vu-list (ō'vū-lĭst), n. A beo'vu-lite (-līt), n. [ovulum + -ite.] Fossil egg.

‖ o'vu-lum (-lŭm), n.; pl. -la (-lȧ). [NL.] Biol. An ovule.

owlet moth. Any noctuid moth; — so called from nocturnal habits, usually somber colors, and fluffy covering.

owl'-eyed' (oul'īd'), a. Having eyes like an owl's; — an epithet of Athena translating Greek γλαυκῶπις (Glaucopis).

owl'ing, n. [From OWL, v. i. See OWLER.] The act of smuggling wool or sheep out of England. Hence, sometimes, the carrying on of any contraband trade. Obs. or Hist., Eng. Formerly, in England, there was an export duty on wool, and to prevent evasion of the duty it was made illegal (by 14 Chas. II. c. 18, sec. 8) to export wool or sheep at night, when the smuggling chiefly took place.

owl'ish, a. Resembling, or characteristic of, an owl. — owl'ish-ly, adv. — owl'ish-ness, n.

owl moth. A Brazilian noctuid moth (Erebus agrippina), the largest known moth, having an expanse of ten inches.

own (ōn), a. [ME. owen, awen, auen, aughen, AS. āgen, p. p. of āgan to possess; akin to OS. ēgun own, G. & D. eigen, Icel. eiginn, Sw. & Dan. egen. See OWE.] Belonging to one's self or itself; peculiar; — most frequently following a possessive case or pronoun, as my, our, thy, your, his. her, its, their, in order to emphasize or intensify the idea of property, peculiar interest, or exclusive ownership, and commonly with reflexive force; as, my own father; my own composition; my own idea; at my own price. "No man was his own [i. e., no man was master of himself, or in possession of his senses]." Shak. Without the possessive preceding, own is now chiefly used to specify relationship as direct or immediate; as, an own brother (as distinguished from a half brother or brother-in-law); own cousins, that is, first cousins. It is sometimes used in the predicate with the force of myself, himself, etc., used as an appositional nominative; as in, he cooked his own dinner; that is, cooked it himself, own here not marking an opposition between his dinner and some other person's. Own is also used absolutely to denote that which belongs to one; as in, he came to his own; a poem of his own.

own cousin. See COUSIN, 2. — to be one's o. man, to have command of one's self; not to be subject to another.

own, v. t.; OWNED (ōnd); OWN'ING. [ME. ohnien, ahnien, AS. āgnian, fr. āgen own, adj. See OWN, a.] 1. To take or get possession of; to acquire or appropriate. Obs.

2. To possess; to have or hold as property, appurtenance, or proprium; to have rightful title to, whether legal or natural; as, to own a house, a title, a prerogative.

3. To acknowledge; variously: to acknowledge as one's own; as, to own a fault; to recognize as one's own, or give recognition to; as, to own an acquaintance; to admit to be true or pertinent; as, to own the force of an argument; to acknowledge as approved; to give countenance to; to authorize; as, to be owned as heir; to acknowledge as having authority or as deserving homage; as, to own an overlord; to concede as due; as, to own a debt.

> The wakeful bloodhound rose, and shook his hide;
> But his sagacious eye an inmate owns. Keats.

4. To claim as one's own. Obs.

Syn. — See ACKNOWLEDGE, HAVE.

to own it, Fox Hunting, to recognize or find the scent; — said of hounds. — to o. up, to confess openly and fully.

own, v. i. To confess; — with to.

own'er (ōn'ẽr), n. One who owns; a proprietor; one who has the legal or rightful title, whether the possessor or not. at owner's risk, on condition that the owner shall bear the risk of loss. Cf. COMMON CARRIER.

> The phrase "at owner's risk" as used in a bill of lading providing for the delivery of the property on deck at the owner's risk could not be regarded as intended by the parties to cover risks from all causes, and including negligent or willful acts of the master and crew. 168 U. S. 104.

own'er-ship, n. State, relation, or fact of being an owner; exclusive right of possession; lawful claim or title; property; proprietorship; dominium. All ownership is by purchase or descent. Cf. PROPERTY.

> What has to be said with reference to the orbit, or contents, of the right of ownership may be . . . arranged under the three heads of possession, enjoyment, and disposition. T. E. Holland.

ox (ŏks), n.; pl. OXEN (ŏk's'n). [AS. oxa; akin to D. os, G. ochs, achse, OHG. ohso, Icel. oxi, Sw. & Dan. oxe, Goth. aúhsa, W. ych, Skr. ukshan ox, bull. Cf. AUROCHS.] 1. The domestic bovine quadruped (Bos taurus), esp. an adult castrated male (which is used for a draft animal or for food) as distinguished from a bull, or uncastrated male, and a steer, or young castrated male. Not applied to the individual female, or cow.

2. Any species of the genus Bos or a closely allied genus; any bovine quadruped; as, a wild ox; extinct oxen.

ox'ac'id (ŏk'ăs'ĭd), n. [oxygen + acid.] Chem. An acid containing oxygen, as chloric acid, sulphuric acid; — contrasted with hydracid. See HYDRACID, ACID, n., 2 a (2).

oxal-, oxalo-. Combining forms used in chemical terms, meaning derived from, or related to, oxalic acid.

ox'a-la-ce'tic (ŏk'ă-lă-sē'tĭk; -sēt'ĭk), a. [oxal- + acetic.] Org. Chem. Designating, or pertaining to, an acid, $COCH_2(CO_2H)_2$, known only in the form of its esters, oxime, etc. The di-ethyl ester is an oil obtained by the condensation of oxalic and acetic esters.

ox'a-lan (ŏk'ă-lăn), n. [Cf. OXALIC.] Org. Chem. The amide, $C_2H_3N_3O_2CONH_2$, of oxaluric acid. It is obtained as a crystalline powder by the action of ammonia and hydrocyanic acid on alloxan, and in other ways.

ox'al-ate (ŏk'ăl-āt), n. [Cf. F. oxalate. See OXALIC.] Chem. A salt or ester of oxalic acid.

ox'al-eth'yl-ine (ŏk'ăl-ĕth'ĭl-ĭn; -ēn; 184), n. Also -in. [oxal- + ethyl- + -ine.] Org. Chem. A poisonous nitrogenous base, $C_6H_{10}N_2$ (methyl ethyl glyoxaline), artificially prepared. It is a colorless liquid having a narcotic ordor, and a physiological action resembling that of atropine.

ox-al'ic (ŏk-săl'ĭk), a. [From OXALIS: cf. F. oxalique.] Chem. Designating, or pertaining to, a dibasic acid, $C_2H_2O_4$, or $(COOH)_2$, existing in oxalis as acid potassium oxalate, and in many plant tissues as calcium oxalate. Oxalic acid is obtained as a white crystalline substance, containing two molecules of water, by the action of nitric acid on sugar, starch, etc. It is prepared on a large scale by the action of fused caustic soda or potash on sawdust. It has a strong acid taste, and is poisonous in large doses. It is used in dyeing, calico printing, bleaching flax and straw, preparation of formic acid, removal of ink stains, etc.

Ox-al'i-da'ce-æ (ŏk-săl'ĭ-dā'sē-ē), n. pl. [NL. See OXALIS.] Bot. A family of plants (order Geraniales), the sorrel family, having compound leaves and regular pentamerous flowers with 10-15 stamens. They are herbs of wide distribution, rarely trees, constituting 7 genera, including about 270 species. Oxalis and Averrhoa are the most important genera. — ox-al'i-da'ceous (-shŭs), a.

Ox'a-lis (ŏk'ă-lĭs), n. [L., a kind of sorrel, Gr. ὀξαλίς, fr. ὀξύς sharp, pungent, acid.] Bot. A very large genus of plants, the wood sorrels, type of the family Oxalidaceæ, having palmately or pinnately compound leaves and white, pink, purple, or yellow flowers with 10 monadelphous stamens. Most species are of warm or tropical regions; some are bulbous and acaulescent, others leafy-stemmed, with fibrous roots. Many are cultivated for their flowers. The herbage is acid. Also [l. c.], a plant or flower of this genus.

ox'a-lu'rate (-lū'rāt), n. A salt or ester of oxaluric acid.

ox'a-lu'ri-a (-lū'rĭ-ă), n. [NL.; oxal- + -uria.] Med. The presence of an excess of calcium oxalate in the urine.

ox'a-lu'ric (-lū'rĭk), a. [oxal- + -uric.] Chem. Designating, or pert. to, a crystalline acid, $NH_2CONH\cdot COCO_2H$, salts of which are got from parabanic acid by action of alkalies.

ox'a-lyl (ŏk'ă-lĭl), n. [oxal- + -yl.] Chem. a A bivalent radical, C_2O_2, the radical of oxalic acid. Cf. BENZOYL. b Carbonyl. Obs. c Carboxyl. Obs.

ox-am'ate (ŏk-săm'āt), n. A salt or ester of oxamic acid.

ox'a-meth'ane (ŏk'ă-mĕth'ān), n. [oxamic + ethyl.] Chem. Ethyl oxamate, crystallizing in white leaflets.

ox'a-meth'yl-ane (-ĭ-lān), n. [oxamic + methyl.] Chem. Methyl oxamate, a crystalline substance.

ox-am'ic (ŏk-săm'ĭk), a. [oxalic + amido.] Chem. Designating, or pertaining to, an acid, $NH_2\cdot C_2O_2\cdot OH$, obtained as a fine crystalline powder, intermediate between oxalic acid and oxamide. Its ammonium salt is obtained by treating oxamide, ethyl oxalate, etc., with ammonia.

ox-am'ide (-īd; -ĭd; 184), n. Also -id. [oxalic + amide.] Chem. A white crystalline neutral substance, $(CONH_2)_2$; the amide of oxalic acid, obtained by treating ethyl oxalate with ammonia, and in other ways.

ox-an'il-ic (ŏk'ăn-ĭl'ĭk), a. [oxalic + aniline.] Chem. Designating a crystalline acid, $C_6H_5NHCOCO_2H$, obtained by heating oxalic acid with aniline; phenyl oxamic acid.

ox-an'i-lide (ŏk-săn'ĭ-līd; -lĭd; 184), n. Also -lid. [oxalic + anilide.] Chem. A white crystalline substance, $(CONHC_6H_5)_2$, obtained by heating aniline oxalate, and in other ways. It may be regarded as a double anilide of oxalic acid or as diphenyl oxamide.

ox-az'ine (ŏk-săz'ĭn; -ēn; 184), n. Also -in. [oxygen + azine.] Org. Chem. An azine whose ring is made up of four atoms of carbon, one of oxygen, and one of nitrogen. According to the relative position of the two latter, the oxazines are classed as orthoxazines, metoxazines, and paroxazines, from their analogy to benzene derivatives. Certain paroxazines are the parent substances of important dyes.

ox-az'ole (-săz'ōl), n. [oxygen + azole.] Org. Chem. A hypothetical cyclic compound, $CH{:}CH{\cdot}O{\cdot}CH{:}N$, one of the two simplest furomonazoles; also, a derivative of the same.

ox'bane' (ŏks'bān'), n. A poisonous amarylidaceous bulbous plant (Boöphane disticha) of the Cape of Good Hope.

ox'bird' (-bûrd'), n. a The dunlin. b The sanderling or other sandpiper. Local, Eng. c An African weaver bird (Textor alector). d An oxpecker.

ox'bow' (-bō'), n. 1. A frame, bent into the shape of the letter U, and embracing an ox's neck as a kind of collar, the upper ends passing through the bar of the yoke; a bow.

ox'cart' (-kärt'), n. A cart drawn by oxen.

ox'er (ŏk'sẽr), n. [From OX.] A fence to restrain oxen; specif., among fox hunters, a strong hedge with a wide ditch, and a single rail in front of it. A double oxer has a rail on each side. Also called ox fence, or rail. Eng.

ox'e-tone (ŏk'sē-tōn), n. [oxyacid lactone, with change of oxy- to oxe- because the compound is neutral.] Org. Chem. Any of a series of neutral compounds derived indirectly from lactones; specif., the simplest member, $C_7H_{12}O_2$, a mobile liquid of pleasant odor. They may be regarded as anhydrides of γ-dihydroxy ketones.

ox'eye' (ŏks'ī'), n. [ox + eye.] 1. Any of several composite plants having heads with a conspicuous disk and marginal rays: a The oxeye daisy. See DAISY, 2. b The field camomile. c Any plant of the genus Buphthalmum. Eng. d Any plant of the genus Heliopsis; also called false sunflower. U. S. e The rudbeckia, or yellow daisy. N. Eng.

2. a A large East Indian and Australian fish (Megalops cyprinoides) related to the tarpon. b A fish, the boce.

3. Local, Eng. a The dunlin. b Any of several titmice.

4. = BULL'S-EYE, 2.

5. An object suggestive of an ox's eye; esp.: a A round or oval window. b Naut. (1) A small cloud which on the African coasts precedes storm. (2) A glass bull's-eye.

ox'eye' bean. The large orbicular brown seed of a tall Asiatic fabaceous climbing shrub (Stizolobium giganteum), with trifoliolate leaves, yellowish flowers, and flat bristly pods; also, the shrub. The seed has a conspicuous raphe.

ox'-eyed' (-īd'), a. Having eyes like those of an ox; — translation of Boöpis (βοῶπις), used by Homer as an epithet especially for Hera.

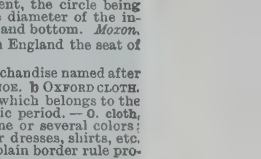
Ox'ford (ŏks'fẽrd), n. 1. The city in England the seat of Oxford University.

2. [sometimes l. c.] An article of merchandise named after Oxford; esp., short for: a OXFORD SHOE. b OXFORD CLOTH. Oxford clay, Geol., a clay formation which belongs to the Middle Oölite of the English Jurassic period. — O. cloth, a fabric woven of dyed threads of one or several colors; also, a printed cotton fabric used for dresses, shirts, etc. — O. corner, Printing, Binding, etc., a plain border rule projecting in each outward direction, making a square outside at each corner. — O. gray or grey, black flecked or dotted with white; a very dark gray. — O. India paper, a kind of printing paper used in the manufacture of thin-paper books and made for the Oxford University Press. — O. marbles. See ARUNDELIAN. — O. movement. See TRACTARIANISM. — O. ocher or ochre, a superior yellow ocher found near Oxford, England. — O. school, the ecclesiastical school which took the form of the Oxford movement. — O. shoe or tie, a low shoe laced or tied over the instep.



Book Cover with Oxford Corners.

Ox'ford-shire Down, or Oxford Down (ŏks'fẽrd-shīr, -shẽr). One of a modern breed of sheep resulting from crossing Cotswolds and Down sheep. It is popular in the midland counties of England.

ox gall. The fresh gall of the domestic ox.

ox'hide' (-hīd'), n. 1. The skin of an ox, or leather of it. 2. Erroneously taken (by confusion with hide, a land measure) as the name of a measure of land.

ox'horn' (-hôrn'), n. 1. The horn of an ox, or a drinking cup made of an ox's horn.

2. A West Indian combretaceous tree (Buceras buceras), yielding a tan bark.

ox'i-dant (ŏk'sĭ-dănt), n. [Cf. F. oxydant, earlier oxidant.] An oxidizing agent.

ox'i-dase (ŏk'sĭ-dās; -dāz), n. [oxidation + -ase.] Chem. Any of a group of enzymes, as laccase, tyrosinase, etc., which promote the oxidation of various substances.

ox'i-date (-dāt), v. t. & i.; -DAT'ED (-dāt'ĕd); -DAT'ING (-dāt'-ĭng). [Cf. F. oxyder, earlier oxider.] To oxidize. Rare.

ox'i-da'tion (-dā'shŭn), n. [Cf. F. oxydation, earlier oxt-.] Chem. Act or process of oxidizing, or the state or result of being oxidized. — ox'i-da'tion-al (-ăl), a.

ox'i-da'tor (-dā'tẽr), n. 1. An oxidizer. Rare.

2. A contrivance for causing a current of air to impinge on the flame of the Argand lamp.

ox'ide (ŏk'sīd; -sĭd; 184), n. Also ox'id. [F. oxide, oxyde; oxygène oxygen + acide acid. The French word was originally correctly spelt oxide; but later the spelling oxyde became substituted to conform it to oxygen, and probably from ignorance of the true origin of the name.] Chem. A

owl'-glass', n. [owl- + glass.] Tyll Eulenspiegel (see EULENSPIEGEL, TYLL); hence, a jester or buffoon.

Owl Nebula. Astron. A great planetary nebula in URSA MAJOR, in figure suggestive of an owl's face. — No. 97 in Messier's catalogue.

owl's-clover, n. Any Californian scrophulariaceous herb of the genus Orthocarpus, esp. O. erianthus. [rose. Dial. Eng.]

owl swallow. A nightjar of the family Podargidæ.

owl train. Any of certain railroad trains whose run is in the nighttime. Cant.

owl'-wide', a. As wide as an owl's eyes and as unseeing.

ow'ner (ō'nẽr; ŏ'nẽr). Dial. Eng. var. of UMBER.

owmlis. ✝ UMBLES.

owmpere. ✝ UMPIRE.

ownde. owndy. ✝ OUNDY.

own'der (ōn'dẽr). Dial. Eng. var. of UNDERN.

owndynge. ✝ OUNDING.

owne. ✝ ONE, OWN.

owner. ✝ HONOR.

own'er-less, a. See -LESS.

own'-form', a. Bot. Of similar form or origin; — applied by Darwin to corresponding organs or pollen in dimorphous or trimorphous flowers.

own'hood, n. [own + -hood: cf. G. eigenheit.] The condition in which one takes self into account; reliance upon or desire for one's own way or will; egoism; selfhood.

own'ing, n. State of being peculiar to self; quality of belonging to one's self.

own'-root', own'-root'ed, a. Hort. Borne upon its own roots; not grafted; — said of a plant.

owns. ✝ OUNCE.

owre. ✝ HOUR; OAR; ORE, mineral; OUR; URE; YOUR.

owre (ōr; our). Obs. or Scot. & dial. Eng. var. of OVER.

owre'gane' (ōr'gān'; our'-). Scot. & dial. Eng. var. of overgone, p. p. of OVERGO.

owre'hip (ōr'hĭp; our'-). Var. of OVERHIP. Scot.

ows-, owt-. For various words in ows-, out- see forms in OUS-, OUT-.

owse (ouz), ow'ser (ou'zẽr), n. Tanner's ooze. See 1st OOZE, 2.

ow'sen, ows'sen (ou'sẽn; -zẽn). Vars. of oxen, pl of OX. Dial.

owt. ✝ AUGHT, OUT.

owt (Hal.). Obs. or dial Eng. var. of OUGHT.

owtouth. ✝ OUTWITH.

owul. ✝ AWL.

owun. ✝ OWN.

owur. ✝ OUR, OVER, YOUR.

owze. ✝ OOZE.

Ox. Bib. [for OXAL.]

ox-. a Short for OXY-. b Short for oxal-am'ide (ŏk'săl-ăm'ĭd; -ĭd), n. Also -id. [oxal- + amide.] = OXAMIDE.

ox'a-lan'tin (ŏk'ă-lăn'tĭn), n. [Cf. ALLOXANTIN.] Chem. A white crystalline nitrogenous substance, $C_8H_6N_4O_6$, obtained by reducing alloxanic acid; — called also leucoturic acid.

ox-al'de-hyde (ŏk-săl'dē-hīd), n. [oxalic + aldehyde.] Chem. = GLYOXAL.

ox'al-im'ide (ŏk'săl-ĭm'ĭd; -īd; 184), n. Also -id. [oxal- + imide.] The imide, $(CO)_2NH$, of oxalic acid. It is a white crystalline substance got by action of phosphorus chlorides on oxoxamic acid.

ox'a-lite, n. [oxal- + -ite.] Humboldtine. Obs.

ox'a-lo-ni'trile (ŏk'ă-lō-nī'trĭl; -trĭl), n. Also -tril. [oxal- + nitrile.] Chem. = CYANOGEN b.

ox'a-lur-am'ide (-lūr-ăm'ĭd; -ĭd), n. Also -id. [oxaluric + amide.] = OXALAN. [banic acid.]

oxalyl urea. Org. Chem. Parabanic acid.

ox-am'i-dine (ŏk-săm'ĭ-dĭn; -dēn; 184), n. Also -din. [oxygen + amido.] = AMIDOXIME.

ox-am'ite (ŏk-săm'īt; ŏk'să-mĭt), n. [oxalic + ammonium + -ite.] Min. Ammonium oxalate, $(NH_4)_2C_2O_4{\cdot}2H_2O$, occurring as a crystalline salt in guano.

ox'a-nil-am'ide (ŏk'ăn-ĭl-ăm'ĭd; -ĭd), n. Also -id. [oxanilic + amide.] Chem. A white crystalline substance, the amide of oxanilic acid; phenyl oxamide.

ox antelope. A bubaline antelope. [ox's stomach.]

ox'ber-ry, n. Dial. Eng. a The fruit of the black bindweed (Tamus communis). b The cuckoo-pint or its fruit.

ox bile. Ox gall.

ox'bird (ŏks'bûrd), n. a The cowbird. Local, U. S. b An oxpecker. [color.]

ox'boy', n. A boy who takes care of oxen. [oxen are shod.]

ox daisy. Oxeye daisy. See DAISY, 2.

ox'e-a (ŏk'sē-ă; ŏk-sē'ă), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ὀξύς sharp.] Zoöl. A needle-shaped sponge spicule sharp at both ends. — ox'e-ate (-āt), a.

ox'en, n., pl. of OX. [OX.]

ox'es, oxeson. Obs. pl. forms of oxeye daisy. a = DAISY, 2. b = OXEYE, 1 d.

Oxf. Abbr. Oxford.

ox fence. = OXER.

Oxf. Gloss. Abbr. Oxford Glossary of Architecture.

ox'fly', n. An ox warble fly or other fly troublesome to cattle.

Ox-for'di-an (ŏks-fôr'dĭ-ăn; 201), a. [From Oxford, England.] Geol Designating a subdivision of the British Jurassic. See GEOLOGY, Chart.

ox'gang', n. [ox + gang, n., 1.] O. Eng. Hist = BOVATE.

ox'gate', n. [See OX; GATE a way.] Law. An oxgang, or bovate. Obs. or Scot. & Dial. Eng.

ox'goad', n. A goad for driving oxen.

Ox'-god', n. = APIS. [GANG.]

ox'go'ing. Dial. var. of OX-GANG.

ox'har'row, n. A kind of large harrow requiring great strength in the team that draws it.

ox'heal', n. Fetid hellebore.

ox'hoft' (ŏks'hŏft'), n.; pl. -HOFTS (-hŏfts'). [G.] A large vessel or measure for liquids; a hogshead. See HOGSHEAD.

ox'house', n. A stable for oxen.

oxi. ✝ ASK.

ox'id (ŏk'sĭd). Var. of OXIDE.

ox'i-da-ble (ŏk'sĭ-dă-b'l), a. [Cf. F. oxydable, earlier oxt-.] Oxidizable. — ox'i-da-bil'i-ty (-bĭl'ĭ-tĭ), n.

binary compound of oxygen with an element or radical; as, iron oxide, ethyl oxide, nitrogen oxide, etc.

☞ In the nomenclature adopted by Lavoisier and his associates, the term oxides was made to include all compounds of oxygen which had no acid (F. acide) properties, as contrasted with the acids, all of which were at that time supposed to contain oxygen.

ox′i-dize (-dīz), v. t.; OX′I-DIZED (-dīzd); OX′I-DIZ′ING (-dīz′ĭng). Chem. a To combine with oxygen or with more oxygen; to add oxygen to; as, to oxidize nitrous acid so as to form nitric acid. b To deprive (a compound) of hydrogen, as by the action of oxygen; as, to oxidize alcohol so as to form aldehyde. c To change by increasing the proportion of the electrically negative part; to change from a lower to a higher valence, as regards the positive element; as, to oxidize ferrous chloride to ferric chloride.

oxidized oil. See BLOWN OIL.

ox′i-dize, v. i. Chem. To become oxidized.

ox′i-diz′er (-dīz′ẽr), n. One that oxidizes; specif., a chemical substance used as an oxidizing agent, as nitric acid, chromic acid, chlorine, etc.

ox-id′u-lat′ed (ŏk-sĭd′ū-lāt′ĕd), a. [Dim. fr. oxidate.] Chem. Existing in an inferior state of oxidation. — oxidulated iron, magnetic iron oxide, Fe_3O_4. Obs.

ox′ime (ŏk′sĭm; -sēm), n. Also ox′im. [oxygen + imide.] Org. Chem. Any of a series of compounds, obtained chiefly by the action of hydroxylamine on aldehydes and ketones, in which the oxygen of the carbonyl group is replaced by the group :NOH (called the isonitroso group, or oxime group). Many oximes of aldehydes and of symmetrical ketones are known in two isomeric forms, distinguished by the prefixes syn- and anti-. A stereoisomeric explanation of this isomerism has been offered.

oximido-. [oxime + -ide.] Org. Chem. A combining form used to designate presence of the oxime group, :NOH; isonitroso-.

ox-in′dole, ox-in′dol (ŏk-sĭn′dōl; -dŏl), n. [oxygen + indole.] Chem. A white crystalline nitrogenous substance, C_8H_7NO, of the indol group, obtained by the reduction of dioxindol and in other ways. It is the lactam of o-amino-phenyl-acetic acid.

ox′lip′ (ŏks′lĭp′), n. [AS. oxanslyppe. See OX; COWSLIP.] a Orig., a hybrid primrose. b An English species of primrose (Primula elatior) with large pale yellow flowers.

Ox-o′ni-an (ŏk-sō′nĭ-ăn), a. [Oxonia, Latinized form of Oxford.] Of or pertaining to the city of Oxford, or the university of Oxford, England. — n. A native or inhabitant of Oxford; usually, a student or a graduate of Oxford University.

ox′o-nite (ŏk′sō-nīt), n. An explosive prepared by dissolving picric acid in nitric acid.

ox-o′ni-um (ŏk-sō′nĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.; oxygen + ammonium.] Chem. The (hypothetical) univalent basic radical OH_3, composed of basic quadrivalent oxygen and of hydrogen; — so called from its analogy to ammonium. The various oxonium compounds which are known are compounds of organic derivatives of this radical.

ox′peck′er (ŏks′pĕk′ẽr), n. A beefeater (bird).

ox ray. A horned ray.

ox′shoe′ (ŏks′shōō′), n. A shoe for an ox, usually consisting of two pieces, one for each side of the hoof.

ox′ter (ŏks′tẽr), n. [AS. ōhsta.] The armpit; the space between the inside of the upper arm and the body; also, an arm or the arms. Dial. Eng. & Scot.

ox′ter, v. t. & i. To lead or support with the arm; to go or walk arm in arm (with); to put the arm around; to embrace; to put under the arm. Dial. Eng. & Scot.

oxter plate. Shipbuilding. A molded plate used to continue the shell plates immediately above the propeller aperture, esp. when this aperture is kept low to secure shorter, and therefore stronger, stern and propeller posts.

ox′tongue′ (ŏks′tŭng′), n. 1. Any of several plants having rough, tongue-shaped leaves, as Anchusa officinalis, Picris echioides, etc. 2. A langue de bœuf. Rare.

ox′y- (ŏk′sĭ-). A combining form from Greek ὀξύς, sharp, keen, acute, acid, shrill, quick; as, *oxy*phlegmasia, acute inflammation; *oxy*carpous, *oxy*gnathous, etc.

ox′y- (ŏk′sĭ-). Chem. A prefix (which is also used adjectively, oxy) designating: a Compounds containing oxygen, esp. oxidation products of the compounds to whose names it is prefixed; as in:

oxycamphor	oxycopaivic	oxynarcotine	oxypurine
oxycamphoric	oxyhydrocarbon	oxynicotine	oxystrychnine
oxycobaltamine	oxyleucotin	oxyoleic	oxytropine

b Hydroxyl derivatives of the compounds to whose name it is prefixed (in this sense more properly hydroxy-), as in:

oxyacetone	oxybenzyl	oxyhippuric	oxypyrotartaric
oxyacetophenone	oxycaffeine	oxyhydroquinone	oxypyruvic oxyadipic	oxycinnamic	oxyjuglone	oxyquinaldine oxyaldehyde	oxycinnoline	oxylactone	oxysalicylic oxyalkyl	oxycitric	oxylepidine	oxystearic oxyamide	oxycomenic	oxylutidine	oxystilbene oxyangelic	oxycoumarin	oxymalic	oxysuberic oxyanthranol	oxycrotonic	oxymesitylene	oxysuccinic oxyanthraquinone	oxycuminic	oxymyristic	oxyterephthalic oxyazelaic	oxydiamine	oxyoctoic	oxyurea oxybenzaldehyde	oxydiketone	oxyphenyl	oxyuvitic oxybenzophenone	oxyethyl	oxyphthalic	oxyvaleric oxyformic	oxypropionic	oxyxylene
	oxyheptoic

oxy acid. = OXYACID. — o. coal gas, a mixture of oxygen and coal gas.

ox′y-æs-the′si-a, or -es-the′si-a (ŏk′sĭ-ĕs-thē′sĭ-ȧ; -zhĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; 1st oxy- + æsthesia.] Med. Abnormal acuteness of sensation.

ox′y-al′de-hyde (-ăl′dē-hīd), n. [2d oxy- + aldehyde.] Org. Chem. An aldehyde containing hydroxyl; — applied esp. to aldehyde phenols, other compounds of this class being usually called aldehyde alcohols. Cf. OXYKETONE.

ox′y-az′o- (-ăz′ō-). [2d oxy- + azo-.] Chem. A combining form (also used adjectively) indicating the joint presence of the azo group, N_2, and hydroxyl, OH.

ox-yb′a-phon (ŏk-sĭb′ȧ-fŏn), n.; L. pl. -PHA (-f*ȧ*). [Gr. ὀξύβαφον vinegar saucer; ὀξύς acid + the root of βάπτειν to dip, βαφή dipping.] Class. Archæol. A vase or vessel for holding sauces, etc. The shape is not precisely known, but the vessel has been wrongly identified with the bell-shaped crater.

ox′y-ben-zo′ic (ŏk′sĭ-bĕn-zō′ĭk), a. [2d oxy- + benzoic.] Chem. Hydroxy-benzoic; designating, or pertaining to, any of the hydroxyl derivatives of benzoic acid, of which the commonest is salicylic acid.

ox′y-bro′mide (-brō′mīd; -mĭd; 184), n. Also -mid. [2d oxy- + bromide.] Chem. A ternary compound of oxygen and bromine; as, phosphorus oxybromide, $POBr_3$.

ox′y-bu-tyr′ic (-bū-tĭr′ĭk), a. [2d oxy- + butyric.] Chem. Hydroxy-butyric; pertaining to or designating any of a group of isomeric acids, $C_3H_6{\cdot}OH{\cdot}CO_2H$.

ox′y-cal′ci-um (-kăl′sĭ-ŭm), a. [2d oxy- + calcium.] Of or pertaining to oxygen and calcium; as, the oxycalcium light. See LIMELIGHT, 1.

ox′y-cel′lu-lose (-sĕl′ū-lōs), n. [2d oxy- + cellulose.] Chem. Any of a group of substances regarded as oxidized cellulose, occurring in wood fiber, or got artificially by oxidizing cellulose. They have a strong affinity for basic dyes.

ox′y-chlo′ric (-klō′rĭk; 201), a. [2d oxy- + chloric.] Chem. Of, pert. to, or designating, certain compounds containing oxygen and chlorine; as, oxychloric acid, or perchloric acid. See PERCHLORIC. — ox′y-chlo′rate (see -ATE, 3 b), n.

ox′y-chlo′ride (-rīd; -rĭd; 184), n. Also -rid. [2d oxy- + chloride.] Chem. A ternary compound of oxygen and chlorine; as, phosphorus oxychloride, $POCl_3$.

Ox′y-coc′cus (-kŏk′ŭs), n. [NL.; 1st oxy- + Gr. κόκκος grain, seed.] Bot. A small genus of vacciniaceous plants, the cranberries, natives of the Northern Hemisphere. They have small thick evergreen leaves and drooping red or pink flowers, succeeded by many-seeded berries. See CRANBERRY, 2.

ox′y-cy′a-nide (-sī′ȧ-nīd; -nĭd; 184), n. Also -nid. [2d oxy- + cyanide.] Chem. A compound of oxygen and cyanogen with some element; as, mercuric oxycyanide, $Hg_2O(CN)_2$.

ox′y-e′ther (-ē′thẽr), a. [2d oxy- + ether.] Of or pert. to a mixture of oxygen and ether vapor. Cf. OXYHYDROGEN.

ox′y-flu′or-ide (-flōō′ŏr-īd; -ĭd; 184), n. Also -id. [2d oxy- + fluoride.] Chem. A ternary compound of oxygen and fluorine, analogous to the oxychlorides.

ox′y-gen (ŏk′sĭ-jĕn), n. [F. oxygène, fr. Gr. ὀξύς sharp, acid + root of γίγνεσθαι to be born. So called by Lavoisier because supposed by him to be an essential part of every acid.] 1. Chem. A colorless, tasteless, odorless, chemically active gaseous element occurring in the free state in the atmosphere, of which it forms about 23 per cent by weight and about 21 per cent by volume, being slightly heavier than nitrogen. Symbol, O; atomic weight, 16.00. Oxygen is the most abundant of all the elements on the earth's surface, for in addition to its free occurrence in the air it forms, in combination, eight ninths by weight of water and nearly one half by weight of the rocks composing the earth's crust, being an ingredient of silica, the silicates, the carbonates, the sulphates, etc. A large proportion of organic compounds also contain it. It was discovered independently by Priestley (who called it dephlogisticated air) and by Scheele, in 1774. The pure gas may be prepared by heating potassium chlorate (best with addition of manganese dioxide), and by various other methods. The chief industrial method is Brin's process (which see). Sp. gr. referred to air, 1.105. Weight of a liter, 1.429 g. Molecular formula, O_2. It is used for the oxyhydrogen flame, as in the lime light, for purifying illuminating gas, in medicine to aid respiration, and for a few other purposes. Oxygen can be reduced to a pale blue liquid boiling at $-182.5°$ C., and to a pale blue solid melting below $-223°$ C. The liquid is strongly magnetic. Chemically, oxygen is commonly bivalent (but see OXONIUM). It is moderately active at ordinary temperatures, and its activity is greatly increased by heat. It combines with all the elements except those of the argon group and fluorine, the process being called oxidation, of which ordinary combustion is only an intense form. It is indispensable in respiration. It is a constituent of all but a very few acids (as hydrochloric, hydrobromic, etc.), and in general, the greater the proportion of oxygen with which an element combines, the more acidic does it become. See also OZONE. 2. Chlorine used in bleaching. Manufacturing Name.

ox′y-gen-ate (ok′sĭ-jĕn-āt), v. t.; -AT′ED (-āt′ĕd); -AT′ING (-āt′ĭng). [Cf. F. oxygéner.] Chem. To impregnate or combine with oxygen; to treat with oxygen; to oxidize; as, to oxygenate the blood; oxygenated water (hydrogen dioxide). — ox′y-gen-a′tion (-ā′shŭn), n.

ox′y-gen-a′tor (-ā′tẽr), n. One that oxygenates; oxidizer.

ox′y-gen-ize (ŏk′sĭ-jĕn-īz), v. t.; -IZED (-īzd); -IZ′ING (-īz′ĭng). To oxidize. — ox′y-gen-iz′a-ble (-īz′ȧ-b'l), a. — ox′i-gen-iz′er (-īz′ẽr), n.

ox′y-gon (ŏk′sĭ-gŏn), n. [Gr. ὀξυγώνιος acute-angled; ὀξύς sharp + γωνία an angle.] A triangle having three acute angles. — ox-yg′o-nal (ŏk-sĭg′ō-năl), ox′y-go′ni-al (ŏk′sĭ-gō′nĭ-ăl), a.

ox′y-hæ′ma-tin, ox′y-he′ma-tin (ŏk′sĭ-hē′m*ȧ*-tĭn; -hĕm′ȧ-tĭn), n. [2d oxy- + hæmatin.] Physiol. Chem. Hæmatin in combination with oxygen.

ox′y-hal′oid (-hăl′oid; -hā′loid), a. [2d oxy- + haloid.] Chem. Designating, or pertaining to, compounds of oxygen and a halogen with some other element. The oxychlorides, oxybromides, etc., are oxyhaloid compounds.

ox′y-hy′dro-gen (-hī′drō-jĕn), a. [2d oxy- + hydrogen.] Chem. Of, pertaining to, or consisting of, a mixture of oxygen and hydrogen. — n. Oxyhydrogen gas.

oxyhydrogen blowpipe, an instrument for producing an oxyhydrogen flame. The form now in universal use consists essentially of two tubes which unite at their orifice. The oxygen and hydrogen, taken from separate reservoirs under pressure, are mixed at the moment of burning. The heat of the flame is sufficient to consume the diamond and easily fuse platinum. Its temperature has been estimated at over 5000° F. — o. light, a light produced by the incandescence of some substance, esp. lime, in the oxyhydrogen flame. Coal gas (producing the oxygas light), or the vapor of ether (oxyether light) or of methylated spirit (oxyspirit light), may be substituted for hydrogen. See LIMELIGHT, 1. — o. microscope, a form of microscope arranged so as to use the oxyhydrogen light as a source of illumination.

ox′y-i′o-dide (-ī′ō-dīd; -dĭd; 184), a. Also -did. [2d oxy- + iodide.] Chem. A ternary compound of oxygen and iodine, analogous to the oxychlorides.

ox′y-ke′tone (-kē′tōn), n. [2d oxy- + ketone.] Chem. A ketone containing hydroxyl; esp., a ketone phenol (that is, an aromatic ketone containing hydroxyl attached to the nucleus). Ketones containing hydroxyl attached to an open chain (as in the ketoses) are usually called ketone alcohols.

ox′y-mo′ron (-mō′rŏn; 201), n.; pl. -RA (-r*ȧ*). [NL., fr. Gr. ὀξύμωρον, fr. ὀξύμωρος pointedly foolish; ὀξύς sharp + μωρός foolish.] Rhet. A figure consisting of the use for epigrammatic effect of a contradictory or incongruous epithet; e. g., cruel kindness; laborious idleness.

ox′y-mu′ri-ate (-mū′rĭ-āt), n. [2d oxy- + muriate.] Old Chem. A salt of "oxymuriatic acid;" a chloride or chlorate; as, oxymuriate of mercury (mercuric chloride), of potash (potassium chlorate), etc.

ox′y-mu′ri-at′ic (-ăt′ĭk), a. [2d oxy- + muriatic.] Old Chem. Pert. to, or consisting of, oxidized muriatic (hydrochloric) acid, that is, chlorine; as, oxymuriatic acid, oxymuriatic gas, names given to chlorine before it was known to be an element. — oxymuriatic matches, matches tipped with oxymuriate of potash (potassium chlorate).

ox′y-naph-tho′ic (-năf-thō′ĭk), a. [2d oxy- + naphthoic.] ox′i-di-za′tion (-dĭ-zā′shŭn; -dī-zā′shŭn), n. Oxidation.

ox′i-dize′ment, n. Oxidation. R.
ox′i-diz′ing (ŏk′sĭ-dīz′ĭng), p. pr. & vb. n. of OXIDIZE. — oxidizing flame. See FLAME, n., 1. ox-id′u-lous, a. Oxidulated. Obs.
ox′i-gen. † OXYGEN.
ox′i-mel. † OXYMEL.
ox-im′e-ter (ŏk-sĭm′ē-tẽr). Var. of oxymeter. = EUDIOMETER. ox′i-od′ic (ŏk′sĭ-ŏd′ĭk). Var. of OXYIODIC. ox′i-salt. Var. of OXYSALT. ox′land, n. Eng. Hist. An oxgang. = BOVATE. ox′like′, a. Characteristic of, or [like, an ox.]
ox louse. A cattle louse. ox′man, n. A man who tends or drives oxen. — ox′man-ship, n.
ox money. Money consisting of oxen as the units of value.
ox-o′le-on (ŏk-sō′lē-ŏn), n. Also ox-o′le-um. [NL.; Gr. ὀξύς sharp, acid + L. oleum oil.] A mixture of oil, vinegar, etc., as a dressing for salad. Obs. or R Oxon. Abbr. (Oxonia) Oxford; Oxfordshire. ox′o-nate (ŏk′sō-nāt), n. Chem. A salt of oxonic acid. oxone. Obs. pl. of OX.
ox-on′ic (ŏk-sŏn′ĭk), a. [oxygen + carbonic.] Chem. Designating a complex nitrogenous acid, $C_4H_5O_4N_3$, obtained in the form of its salts by slow oxidation of uric acid.
Oxonien. Abbr. Oxoniensis (L.) [of Oxford].
Ox′o-nol′a-try (ŏk′sō-nŏl′ȧ-trĭ), n. [LL. Oxonia for Oxford + -latry.] Worship of Oxford. ox penny. Eng. Law. A tax on oxen. Obs. ox pith. Ox marrow. Obs. ox rail. An oxer. Eng.
ox′reim′ (ōks′rēm′), n. [D. os ox + riem thong.] A narrow strip of oxhide, flat or twisted, as for straps. South Africa.
ox sole. The whiff (fish). Ireland. ox′star (ŏk′stẽr). Obs. or Scot. [var. of OXTER.]
ox′tail′, n. The tail of an ox. ox unit. A primitive monetary unit, the value of an ox. ox warble. See WARBLE FLY. ox′y, a. Of or pertaining to an ox. Obs. ox′y-a-can′tha (ŏk′sĭ-ȧ-kăn′th*ȧ*), n. [Gr. ὀξυάκανθα.] The hawthorn Cratægus pyracantha. Obs.
ox′y-a-can′thine (-thĭn; -thēn; 184), n. Also -thin. [oxyacanthous + -ine.] Chem. A white crystalline alkaloid obtained from barberry root.
ox′y-a-can′thous (-thŭs), a. [Cf. Gr. ὀξυάκανθος a plant having sharp thorns. See 1st OXY-; ACANTHA.] Bot. Having sharp spines or thorns.
ox′y-ac′e-tate, n. [2d oxy- + acetate.] = GLYCOLATE. ox′y-a-ce′tic, a. [2d oxy- + acetic.] Hydroxyacetic; designating an acid called also glycolic acid.
ox′y-ac′id, n. [2d oxy- + acid.] a = OXACID. b = HYDROXY ACID.
Ox′y-æ′na (ŏk′sĭ-ē′n*ȧ*), n. [NL.; prob. 1st oxy- + Gr. -αινα, a fem. ending.] Paleon. A genus of creodonts from the North American Eocene, type of a family, Ox′y-æn′i-dæ (-ĕn′ĭ-dē). ox′y-am-mo′ni-a, n. [2d oxy- + ammonia.] = HYDROXYLAMINE.
ox′y-an′thra-cene, n. [2d oxy- + anthracene.] = ANTHRAQUINONE. ox′y-a′phi-a (ŏk′sĭ-ā′fĭ-ȧ; -ăf′ĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; 1st oxy- + Gr. ἁφή touch.] Med. Acuteness of touch.
ox′y-as′ter (ŏk′sĭ-ăs′tẽr), n. [1st oxy- + Gr. ἀστήρ star.] Zoöl. A stellate sponge spicule having acute rays.
ox′y-az′ine (-ăz′ĭn; -ēn; 184). Also -in. Var. of OXAZINE. ox′y-az′ole (-ăz′ōl). Var. of OXAZOLE. ox′y-ben′zene, n. [2d oxy- + benzene.] Chem. = PHENOL. ox′y-blep′si-a (ŏk′sĭ-blĕp′sĭ-ȧ), n. [NL., fr. Gr. ὀξυβλεψία; ὀξύς sharp + βλέψις, fr. βλέπειν to see.] Med. Acuteness of sight.
ox′y-bro′mic, a. [2d oxy- + bromic.] Chem. Designating certain compounds containing oxygen and bromine.
ox′y-ca-pro′ic, a. Chem. See 2d OXY- b; CAPROIC. ox′y-car′pous, a. [1st oxy- + -carpous.] Bot. Having sharp-pointed fruits. Rare.
ox′y-ceph′a-ly (-sĕf′ȧ-lĭ), n. [1st oxy- + Gr. κεφαλή head.] Craniol. Loftiness of skull due to early synostosis of the parietal and occipital bones with compensating growth in the region of the anterior fontanel. — ox′y-ce-phal′ic (-sē-făl′ĭk), a.
ox′y-cho′line (-kō′lĭn; -lēn; 184), n. Also -lin. [2d oxy- + choline.] Chem. Muscarine. ox′y-chro′ma-tin, n. [2d oxy- + chromatin.] Biol. = LININ, 2. ox′y-crate (ŏk′sĭ-krāt), n. [Gr. ὀξύκρατον; ὀξύς acid + κεραννύναι to mix.] Med. A mixture of water and vinegar.
ox′y-cro′ce-um (-krō′sē-ŭm), n. [NL.; 1st oxy- + Gr. κρόκος saffron; cf. L. croceus of saffron.] Old Med. A plaster of vinegar, saffron, etc. Obs. — ox′y-cro′ce-an, a. Obs. [Obsoles.] ox′yd, ox′yde. Vars. of OXIDE. ox′y-dac′tyl, a. [1st oxy- + dactyl.] Zoöl. Having slender, tapered digits. ox′y-dant, ox′y-dase, etc. Vars. of OXIDANT, OXIDASE, etc. ox′y-di′act (-dī′ăkt), a. [1st oxy- + di- + Gr. ἀκτίς ray.] Zoöl. Having three axes, but only two rays developed; — said of certain sponge spicules.
ox′y-dor′ci-cal, a. [Gr. ὀξυδορκικός; ὀξύς sharp + root of δέρκεσθαι to see.] Making the sight sharp. Obs.
ox′y-es-the′si-a. Var. of OXYÆSTHESIA. ox′y-e′ther light (ŏk′sĭ-ē′thẽr). See OXYHYDROGEN LIGHT.
ox′y-fat′ty (-făt′ĭ), a. Designating acids which are hydroxy derivatives of fatty acids.
ox′y-gas light. See OXYHYDROGEN LIGHT. oxygen acid. See ACID, n., 2 a. ox-yg′e-nant (ŏk-sĭj′ē-nănt), n. [Cf. F. oxygénant, p. pr.] An oxidizing agent. Obs. or R.
ox′y-ge′ni-um (ŏk′sĭ-jē′nĭ-ŭm), n. [NL.] Chem. The Latinized form of OXYGEN. Rare.
ox′y-gen-ize′ment, n. Oxidation.
ox-yg′e-nous (ŏk-sĭj′ē-nŭs), a. Oxygenic. ox′y-geu′si-a (ŏk′sĭ-gū′sĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.; 1st oxy- + Gr. γεῦσις taste.] Med. Excessive or morbid acuteness of sense of taste.
ox-yg′na-thous (ŏk-sĭg′n*ȧ*-thŭs), a. [oxy- + Gr. γνάθος jaw.] Zoöl. Having smooth or nearly smooth jaws, as certain land snails and slugs.
ox-yg′o-nous (-ō-nŭs), a. Math. Oxygonal. ox′y-hæ′ma-cy′a-nin (-hē′m*ȧ*-sī′ȧ-nĭn; -hĕm′ȧ-), ox′y-hæ′mo-cy′a-nin (-hē′mō-; -hĕm′ō-), n. Also oxyhe-. [2d oxy- + hæmacyanin, hæmocyanin.] See HÆMACYANIN.
ox′y-hæ′mo-glo′bin, ox′y-he′mo- (-hē′mō-glō′bĭn; -hĕm′ō-), n. [2d oxy- + hæmoglobin.] See HÆMOGLOBIN. ox′y-he′ma-tin, ox′y-he′mo-cy′a-nin. Vars. of OXYHÆMATIN, OXYHÆMACYANIN ox′y-hy′drate (ŏk′sĭ-hī′drāt), n. Chem. A hydroxide. ox′y-hy′dric (-drĭk), a. a Composed of oxygen and hydrogen in combination; as, oxyhydric acid (a name sometimes given to water). b = OXYHYDROGEN. ox′y-i-od′ic (-ī-ŏd′ĭk), a. [2d oxy- + iodic.] Iodic. Obs.
Ox′y-la-brac′i-dæ (-l*ȧ*-brăs′ĭ-dē), n. pl. [NL.; 1st oxy- + Gr. λάβραξ a ravenous sea fish.] Zoöl. A family of fishes related to, or included in, the Serranidæ, consisting of the robalos or snooks. Ox′y-la′brax (-lā′brăks), syn. Centropomus, is the only genus.
Ox′y-lus (ŏk′sĭ-lŭs), n. [Gr. Ὄξυλος.] See HERACLIDÆ. ox′y-ma-lon′ic, a. [2d oxy- + malonic.] Chem. = TARTRONIC ox-ym′e-ter (ŏk-sĭm′ē-tẽr), n. [2d oxy- + -meter.] = EUDIOMETER. ox′y-meth′yl-ene, n. [2d oxy- + methylene.] See FORMALDEHYDE.
ox′y-met′ric, a. [2d oxy- + metric.] Chem. Of or pertaining to the measurement of oxygen.
ox′y-mu′ri-at′ed, a. Oxymuriatic; oxymuriate of. Obs.
ox′y-neu′rine (ŏk′sĭ-nū′rĭn; -rēn), n. Also -rin. = BETAINE

Chem. Designating, or pertaining to, any acid hydroxyl derivative of naphthoic acid. The oxynaphthoic acid used as an antiseptic is a white powder melting at 185–186° C.

ox'y-ni'trate (ŏk'sĭ-nī'trāt), n. [2d oxy- + nitrate.] Chem. A nitrate with more than the normal proportion of oxygen; a basic nitrate; as, bismuth oxynitrate, $Bi(OH)_2NO_3$.

ox-yn'tic (ŏk-sĭn'tĭk), a. [Gr. ὀξύνειν to make acid.] Secreting acid; — applied to the parietal cells of the gastric glands, or to the entire glands. See CARDIAC GLANDS, a.

ox'y-o'pi-a (ŏk'sĭ-ō'pĭ-ȧ) } n. [NL. oxyopia; 1st oxy- + ox'y-o'py (ŏk'sĭ-ō'pĭ) } -opia.] Med. Excessive acuteness of sight.

ox'y-phos'phate (-fŏs'fāt), n. [2d oxy- + phosphate.] Chem. a A higher phosphate. Obs. b A basic phosphate, specif. one of zinc used by dentists as a filling.

ox'y-quin'o-line (-kwĭn'ō-lĭn; -lēn), n. Also -lin. [2d oxy- + quinoline.] Chem. A hydroxy derivative of quinoline; specif., carbostyril.

Ox'yr-rhyn'cha (-rĭn'kȧ), n. pl. Also Oxyrhyncha. [NL.; 1st oxy- + Gr. ῥύγχος snout.] Zoöl. A superfamily or other division of crabs having typically a globose or subtriangular carapace with a conspicuously projecting rostrum, nine pairs of gills, and the male genital apertures in the basal segments of the last pair of legs. It includes many species mostly known as spider crabs. Maioidea is a synonym. — ox'yr-rhyn'chid, ox'y-rhyn'chid (-kĭd), a.

ox'y-salt' (ŏk'sĭ-sôlt'), n. [2d oxy- + salt.] Chem. A salt of an oxacid, as a sulphate.

ox'y-sul'phide (-sŭl'fīd ; -fĭd ; 184), n. Also -phid, -fide, -fid. Chem. A ternary compound of oxygen and sulphur. Oxysulphides may be regarded as sulphides in which part of the sulphur is replaced by oxygen.

ox'y-to'ci-a (-tō'shĭ-ȧ), n. [NL.] Med. Quick childbirth. — ox-yt'o-cous (ŏk-sĭt'ō-kŭs), a.

o'yer (ō'yĕr ; oi'ĕr), n. [AF., a hearing, infin. as n., fr. OF. oïr to hear, F. ouïr, L. audire. See AUDIBLE.] Law. a Short for OYER AND TERMINER. b Common-law Pleading. A hearing or an inspection in open court which a party might demand of any instrument of which the opposite party was bound to make profert; also, the demand for such hearing or inspection. In England and most of the United States oyer is abolished.

oyer and terminer, lit., to hear and determine; hence, a hearing and determining; — used in England in commission, or writ, of oyer and terminer, a commission formerly issued to the royal judges, sergeants, and others, empowering them to hear and determine treasons, felonies, and misdemeanors at the assizes or on special occasions. In the United States the phrase is used with reference to various superior courts of similar jurisdiction.

o'yez' (ō'yĕs'; 277), interj. Also o'yes'. [AF. oyez hear ye. See OYER.] Hear; attend; — a cry used by criers of courts to secure silence before a proclamation. It is usually repeated three times. — n. The cry of "oyez!"

oys'ter (ois'tĕr), n. [ME. oistre, OF. oistre, F. huître, L. ostrea, ostreum, Gr. ὄστρεον; prob. akin to ὀστέον bone, the oyster being so named from its shell. Cf. OSSEOUS, OSTRACIZE.] 1. Any marine bivalve mollusk of the genus Ostrea or family Ostreidæ. They have a rough, irregular shell, which is closed by a single abductor muscle. The foot is small or wanting, and there is no siphon. They are found lying on the bottom, or adhering to stones or other objects, in shallow water along the seacoasts or in brackish water in the mouths of rivers, their food consisting of minute plants and animals carried to them by the current. The American oyster (Ostrea virginica) of the Atlantic and Gulf coasts of North America, the European oyster (Ostrea edulis), and the native oyster (Ostrea lurida) of the Pacific coast of North America are the most important as food, the first two being extensively cultivated.

Oyster with the right Valve of the Shell and the right Mantle Lobe removed. a Muscle; b Gills; c c' Mantle; d Palpi; e Mouth; f Anus; g Intestine; h Liver.

Why, then the world's mine oyster, Which I with sword will open. Shak.

2. Any of various other bivalve mollusks more or less resembling the true oyster, as the pearl oyster (Avicula margaritifera), or the Bermuda oyster (Margaritophora radiata), which is used as food in Bermuda.

3. The delicate morsel contained in a concavity of the bone on each side of the lower part of the back of a fowl.

4. An extremely taciturn or reserved person. Slang.

oyster catcher. Any of certain wading birds of the widely distributed genus Hæmatopus. They are from 16 to 20 inches in length, and the stout legs and heavy wedge-shaped bill are usually pinkish or bright red. The common species of Europe, Asia, and northern Africa (H. ostralegus) and that of the American Atlantic coast (H. palliatus) have the plumage chiefly or entirely black and white. The black oyster catcher (H. bachmani) of both coasts of the North Pacific is entirely brownish black.

Oyster Catcher (Hæmatopus ostralegus).

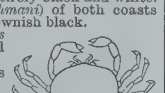
oys'ter-ing, n. The act or business of taking oysters for the market.

oyster mushroom. An edible agaricaceous fungus or mushroom (Pleurotus ostreatus) growing in shelving masses on dead wood. The thallus has somewhat the form of an oyster shell. Also, any of several related species of this genus.



Oyster Crab. Nat. size.

oyster rock. An area of solid bottom upon which oysters grow; a natural oyster bed. It usually consists of a mass of dead and broken and more or less compacted shells. Local, Chesapeake Bay.

oys'ter-shell' bark louse. A very abundant and widely distributed scale insect (Mytilaspis pomorum) which infests and greatly injures various trees and shrubs.

o-zæ'na, ozena (ō-zē'nȧ), n. [NL., fr. L. ozæna, Gr. ὀζαινα, fr. ὄζειν to smell.] Med. A discharge of fetid matter from the nostril, particularly if associated with ulceration of the soft parts and disease of the bones of the nose.

O-zan'na (ō-zăn'ȧ), n. [NL.] Zoöl. A genus of large antelopes having long, annulated horns backwardly curved but not twisted, and present in both sexes. It includes the sable antelope, roan antelope, and the extinct blaubok. Hippotragus is a synonym.

o'zo-ben'zene (-bĕn'zēn ; -bĕn-zēn'), n. Org. Chem. A compound, $C_6H_6O_3$, formed as a white amorphous mass by the union of ozone and benzene.

o'zo-ce'rite (ō'zō-sē'rīt ; ō-zō'sĕr-īt), n. [Gr. ὄζειν to smell + κηρός wax.] Min. A waxlike mineral, colorless or white when pure, but often greenish, yellowish, or brown. Some varieties have an unpleasant odor. Ozocerite is a mixture of hydrocarbons. It is used in making ceresin, candles, etc.

o'zo-na'tion (ō'zō-nā'shŭn), n. Chem. Act of converting into, treating with, or producing, ozone; ozonization.

o'zone (ō'zōn), n. [Gr. ὄζειν to smell. See ODOR.] Chem. A faintly blue gaseous substance obtained (usually much diluted) by the silent discharge of electricity in air or oxygen, and by other methods; — so called from its peculiar odor, which recalls that of weak chlorine. It is an allotropic form of oxygen, being one and one half times as dense as ordinary oxygen gas and having assigned to it the molecular formula O_3. It is a much more powerful oxidizer than oxygen gas, and comparatively unstable. It may be condensed to a deep blue magnetic liquid boiling at −119° C. Ozone is used commercially for sterilizing water, bleaching oils, etc. Its existence in the atmosphere (except very locally and temporarily, as about an electric machine) has never been conclusively proved.

ozone paper. Chem. Paper coated with starch and potassium iodide. It turns blue when exposed to oxidizers.

o-zon'ic (ō-zŏn'ĭk), a. Pert. to, like, or containing, ozone. ozonic ether, a solution of hydrogen dioxide in ether.

o'zo-nide (ō'zō-nīd), n. Also -nid. Chem. A compound of ozone. Such compounds are formed with various organic compounds containing double bonds. Cf. OZOBENZENE.

o'zo-nif'er-ous (-nĭf'ẽr-ŭs), a. [ozone + -ferous.] Bearing or producing ozone.

o'zon-ize (ō'zō-nīz), v. t. ; -IZED (-nīzd) ; -IZ'ING (-nīz'ĭng). Chem. a To convert into ozone, as oxygen. b To treat or impregnate with ozone. — v. i. To become converted into ozone. — o'zo-ni-za'tion (-nĭ-zā'shŭn ; -nī-zā'shŭn), n.

o'zon-iz'er (ō'zō-nīz'ẽr), n., Chem. One that ozonizes; esp., an apparatus for converting oxygen into ozone, usually by passing a silent electric discharge through a current of air.

o-zo'no-scope (ō-zō'nō-skōp), n. [ozone + -scope.] Chem. An instrument employed to indicate the presence or the amount of ozone, as by ozone paper.

o-zo'no-scop'ic (-skŏp'ĭk), a. [ozone + -scopic.] Chem. Serving to indicate the presence or the amount of ozone; as, ozonoscopic paper (ozone paper).

o'zon-ous (ō'zō-nŭs), a. Pert. to, or containing, ozone.

P (pē). 1. The sixteenth letter of the English alphabet. It is a voiceless bilabial stopped consonant, the voiced correlative of which is b. Its form and value come from the Latin, into which the letter was brought, through the ancient Greek, from the Phœnician, its ultimate origin being perhaps Egyptian. See ALPHABET, Illust. Etymologically P is most closely related to b, f, and v; as, bobble, hopple; father, paternal; recipient, receive. See B, F, and M. P is sometimes silent, esp. initially in the combinations pn, ps, pt, as in pneumatic, pseudo, pterygoid, etc. With h it unites to form the digraph ph, the regular phonetic value of which is f. See Guide to Pron., § 217.

2. As a symbol, used to denote or indicate: a The fifteenth or (cf. K, 2 a) the sixteenth in a series; fifteenth (or sixteenth) in order or class; sometimes, the numeral fifteen (or sixteen); as, P Battery. b [cap.] Chem. Phosphorus. c [cap.] Elec. Power. d [cap.] Mech. Pressure.

3. As a medieval Roman numeral, P stands for 400, and P̄ for 400,000.

‖ pa-ci'fi-co (pä-sē'fē-kō; 138), n.; pl. -cos (Sp. -kōs). [Sp. pacífico. See PACIFIC.] A peaceable person; — applied specif. by the Spaniards to the natives in Cuba and the Philippine Islands who did not oppose the Spanish arms.

pac'i-fy (păs'Ĭ-fī), v. t.; PAC'I-FIED (-fīd); PAC'I-FY'ING (-fī'-Ing). [F. pacifier, L. pacificare; pax, pacis, peace + -ficare (in comp.) to make. See PEACE; -FY.] To make to be at peace; to appease; calm; still; quiet; to allay the agitation, excitement, or resentment of; to tranquilize; as, to pacify an angry man; to pacify pride, appetite, or importunity. "Pray ye, pacify yourself." Shak.

Syn. — Assuage, allay, alleviate, mitigate, soften, soothe, abate; reconcile, win over. — PACIFY, APPEASE, PLACATE, PROPITIATE, CONCILIATE, MOLLIFY. To PACIFY is esp. to allay anger, agitation, or resentment; to APPEASE is to pacify by satisfying cravings or demands; as, "Soon she pacified the wrathful prince" (Spenser); "He will not now be pacified: Fabian can scarce hold him yonder" (Shak.); "This transient glance served rather to irritate than to appease my curiosity" (Gibbon). But appease, together with PLACATE and PROPITIATE, applies esp. to the satisfaction of one who is offended or hostile, appease implying rather the allaying of hostile feeling, placate and propitiate suggesting more positively the act of rendering favorable or propitious; as, "by prayer the offended Deity to appease" (Milton); an attempt to placate an opposing faction; "He propitiated her with a present of a comb, a fan, and a black mantle" (Thackeray). To CONCILIATE is to win over from a state of unfriendliness or distrust; to MOLLIFY is to soften or soothe (esp.) wounded feelings; as, "Nothing so conciliates many . . . as to ask and receive instruction from them" (Landor); "He endeavors rather to conciliate your opinion than conquer it by force" (Scott); "His careworn look . . . mollified my wife toward him" (Thackeray); "in hope to mollify the sullen bridegroom" (Dryden); he was somewhat mollified by the attention. See ALLEVIATE, PROPITIATION, PALLIATE.

pal'a-fitte (păl'ă-fĭt ; pă'lă'fĭt'), n. [F., fr. It. palafitta pile work; cf. palo pole, and fitto, p. p. of figgere to fix.] Archæol. A pile-built lake dwelling. See LAKE DWELLING.

pa-lag'o-nite (pā-lăg'ō-nīt), n. [From occurrence in Palagonia, Sicily.] Petrog. Basaltic glass in angular, variegated fragments, more or less altered and devitrified, mixed with volcanic ash and forming a basaltic tuff (palagonite tuff). — pa-lag'o-nit'ic (-nĭt'ĭk), a.

Pal'a-me'des (păl'ă-mē'dēz), n. [L., fr. Gr. Παλαμήδης.] Gr. Myth. A hero of the Trojan war (mentioned only by post-Homeric poets) who was treacherously slain by the Greeks, or, according to one version, by Odysseus in revenge for Palamedes's detection of his feigned madness. His father, Nauplius, avenged his death by causing shipwreck of many Greek ships by false signals.

Pal'a-mon (păl'ă-mŏn), n. A noble Theban youth in Chaucer's "Knight's Tale" (derived from Boccaccio's "Teseide"). Palamon and his friend Arcite become rivals in love for the same lady, the fair Emelye (Emilia or Emily in Dryden). To decide the matter, a grand tournament is held, in which Arcite wins. But through divine agency Arcite's death is brought about, and Palamon weds Emelye. Dryden made a version of the poem under the name of "Palamon and Arcite," and the story is the subject of the play (1634) "The Two Noble Kinsmen."

pal'an-quin', pal'an-keen' (păl'ăn-kēn'), n. {Pg. palanquim, Jav. palangki (or some Hind. form), through Prakrit fr. Skr. paryaṅka, palyaṅka, bed, couch; cf. F. palanquin. Cf. given country. The term paleolithic period was applied in Europe to the earliest known culture period, which was apparently sharply separated from the succeeding and much shorter period, called the neolithic period, the two forming the age of stone. In general, however, the passage from the lower to the higher phases of stone art was gradual, and not synchronous over the world, so that for general application the term paleolithic stage, in the sense of primitive stage, and neolithic stage, in the sense of higher stage, would correctly express the distinction. Some have estimated the duration of the paleolithic period at as much as a half million years. It has been subdivided into periods or epochs as follows:

paleolithic*, or Mousterian†, typical implements such as spearheads, axes, scrapers, etc.

Solutrian†, finely chipped stone implements, bone and horn awls, etc.

mesolithic*, or Magdalenian†, scrapers, gravers, saws, knives, borers, needles, hooks, etc., of flint, bone, and ivory; also, artistic carvings in bone and ivory, representing the horse, mammoth, reindeer, man, etc.

pa'le-on-tol'o-gy, pa'læ-on-tol'o-gy (-jĭ), n. [paleo- + Gr. ὄντα existing things + -logy. Cf. ONTOLOGY.] 1. The science that deals with the life of past geological periods. It is based on the study of the fossil remains of organisms. Although fossils had been recognized as the remains of organisms by many earlier observers, Cuvier (1769-1832) and some of his contemporaries first began the study by scientific methods, and showed that the fossils of the lower and earlier formations differed from existing organisms more than those of the later or upper formations. It is now understood that paleontology gives a true though incomplete record of the evolution of the existing forms of life. As the forms of life characteristic of the various periods are fairly well known, formations are often identified by their fossils. See FOSSIL, n., 2, GEOLOGY, PALEOBOTANY.

2. A treatise on the science.

pal-la'di-um, n. [NL., fr. the asteroid Pallas, fr. Pallas, the goddess.] Chem. A rare metallic element of the platinum group, found native, and also alloyed with platinum and gold. Like platinum, it is silver-white, ductile, malleable, and permanent in the air, but is lighter (sp. gr., 11.8) and more easily fusible. Symbol, Pd; at. wt., 106.7. Palladium was discovered in 1803 by Wollaston, who named it from the newly discovered asteroid Pallas. It has a remarkable power of occluding gases, absorbing in the spongy form nearly a thousand volumes of hydrogen. It is used for graduated circles and verniers, for plating certain silver goods, and in dentistry. Chemically palladium resembles platinum, being chiefly bivalent or quadrivalent.

pal'lah (păl'ă), n. [Sechuana phala.] A large South African antelope (Æpyceros melampus) of a brownish bay color, white below, with a black crescentic stripe on the haunch. The male has slender annulated lyrate horns. Another species (Æ. petersi) inhabits West Africa.

4. To moderate, mitigate, or qualify. Rare.

To palliate dullness, and give time a shove. Cowper.

5. To satisfy or please (the taste). Obs.
Syn. — Hide, cover, cloak, conceal, excuse, gloss, mitigate, soften. — PALLIATE, EXTENUATE. To PALLIATE is properly to conceal or cloak the enormity of a crime or offense, to EXTENUATE, to lessen its magnitude; as, "We have not endeavored to conceal or even palliate his errors" (Lockhart); "These, however varnished, however colored over, however extenuated or diminished, . . . will in the event feel the wrath of God" (Paley). But the two words are often employed without sharp distinction, palliate suggesting the desire to soften in any way what is wrong or culpable, extenuate applying to the attempt to excuse it more formally; as, "his frolics — a name that palliates deeds of folly and of shame" (Cowper); "I make a feint of excusing myself — since one could never get on with one's faults so complacently if one could not palliate them" (Lowell); "Speak of me as I am; nothing extenuate, nor set down aught in malice" (Shak.); "[He] undertook, not indeed to vindicate the action, . . . but to extenuate it by an apology" (Johnson). See ALLEVIATE, DISSEMBLE, EXCULPATE.

pal'li-a'tion (-ā'shŭn), n. [Cf. F. palliation.] A palliating; state of being palliated; as: a Cloaking; hiding; a cloak; a disguise. b Extenuation; excuse; as, palliation of faults. c Mitigation; alleviation, as of a disease.

2. Eccl. a R. C. Ch. A band of white wool, worn on the shoulders, with four purple crosses worked on it; a pall. The wool is obtained from two lambs brought to the basilica of St. Agnes, Rome, and blessed. The pallium is worn by the Pope, and sent to patriarchs, primates, and archbishops, as a sign that they share in the plenitude of the episcopal office. Before it is sent, the pallium is laid for the night on the tomb of St. Peter. b An altar cloth; a pall.
3. Zoöl. The mantle of a mollusk, brachiopod, or bird.
4. Meteor. A mantle, or extended sheet, of clouds.

pall'-mall' (pĕl'mĕl'), n. [OF. palemail, It. pallamaglio; palla a ball (of German origin, akin to E. ball) + maglio hammer, fr. L. malleus. See 1st BALL; MALL a beetle.] 1. A mallet used to strike a ball, esp. that used in the game of pall-mall (see def. 2). Obs.
2. A game, formerly common in Italy, France, Scotland, and England, in which a wooden ball was driven with a mallet. "Put briefly, and therefore, of course, inaccurately, it [pall-mall] may be defined as golf played with a croquet mallet down an elongated skittle alley. . . . The balls, which in the only surviving examples are of boxwood, are about twelve inches in circumference. The aim was, as in golf, to drive the ball over the course in the possible strokes, but, instead of holing out, it was necessary to drive under hoops which were set down the alley. It would appear that one feat required was to drive the ball through a ring of no great diameter, suspended, as would appear from one illustration, at the height of some eight or ten feet in the air. It is hard not to suspect that the artist . . . had trusted to imagination rather than actual inspection, for, apart from the enormous difficulty of driving a ball through the ring, there would be the absolute impossibility of persuading one's opponent that it had gone through and not outside." Encyc. of Sport
3. The alley in which pall-mall was played. Obs.
4. Written Pall Mall. (pron. also păl' măl') In London, a street on the site of a former pall-mall alley, the center of club life; also, the War Office, which was in this street.

2. To manipulate with, or conceal in, the palm, as in cheating at cards or dice or in juggling; to get by palming.

They palmed the trick that lost the game. Prior.

3. To impose by fraud, as by sleight of hand; to pass or put by trickery; — usually with off.

For you may palm upon us new for old. Dryden.

palm, n. [AS. palm, palma, L. palma; — so named from the leaf resembling a hand. See 1st PALM.] 1. Any monocotyledonous plant of the family Phœnicaceæ. Palms are mostly trees with tall columnar trunks bearing a crown of gigantic leaves having stout, sheathing, often prickly petioles, the persistent bases of which sometimes clothe the trunk for part or all of its length. Some, as the saw palmetto, are low, nearly acaulescent undershrubs; a few, as the rattan palm, climb by means of hooks or prickles. The wood of palm stems, being without a definite cambium ring, is incapable of secondary growth. The leaves are either pinnate (feather palms) or palmately cleft (fan palms). The small flowers are borne in huge clusters subtended by spathes; the fruit varies greatly in size and structure, a date and a coconut well illustrating two extremes. Palms are the most important and valuable economic plants of the tropics, and their products are widely used in the arts. The trunks and leaves are used in building and thatching; the leaf sheaths, in the manufacture of boxes, wrapping, etc.; sugar and wine are made from the sap; the fruit is often used for food, and the seeds of many species yield valuable oils and fats. Wax and sago are occasional products. Nearly all palms are ornamental in cultivation. Among the most important kinds are the date palm, coco palm, oil palm, betel palm, wax palm, piassaba, rattan palm, assai, palmyra, and the various palmettos and cabbage palms. See PHŒNICACEÆ; also COCO, Illust., CABBAGE PALMETTO, Illust., etc.

A Feather Palm (Geonoma gracilis).

2. A leaf of the palm, anciently, and still on festal occasions in some churches, borne or worn as a symbol of victory or rejoicing; a palm branch; as, to wave palms.
3. Hence: Any symbol or token of superiority, success, or triumph; also, victory; triumph; supremacy; prize.

"The palm of martyrdom." Chaucer.

And bear the palm alone. Shak.

4. A branch of any of several other trees or shrubs substituted for the true palm in church observances; also, any plant so used, as the hazel, willow, laurel, yew, larch, and fir, and in the United States the hemlock spruce.
5. Of a tree, a branch; of a palm tree, a leaf. Obs., exc. as in definition 2, above.
6. Short for PALM WINE. Obs.

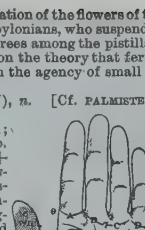
See PALM of the hand, MASTERY.] 1. Art or practice of divining or telling fortunes, or of judging of character, aptitudes, and probabilities, by the lines, marks, etc., in the palm of the hand; art of reading, or inferring, a person's character or his past or possible future from his hand; chiromancy; chirognomy. Palmistry is based on a consideration of the character of the hand in general and esp. of the lines, mounts, and marks on the palm. The mounts are regions upon the palm (specially named from being formerly regarded as indicative of the influence of planets) considered to denote degrees of temperament or predominant traits. They are the mounts of Jupiter (A), ambition; Saturn (B), seriousness; Apollo (C), brilliancy; Mercury (D), practicality, adaptability in business; Venus (E), love, sense of harmony; Moon or Luna (F), imagination; Mars, the middle cross section of the hand, including upper Mars (G), stimulation, lower Mars (H), courage, plain of Mars (I), temper, also indicated at 16. The principal lines (named from that concerning which they are considered to reveal information) are: line of life, or life line (1), vitality, duration of life; line of the head, or head line (2), mentality and judgment; line of the heart, or heart line (3), the heart, emotional nature, affection, generosity; line of fate, line of Saturn, or fate line (4), the influence of chance or haphazard, fortune, good or bad; line of Apollo, line of the sun, line of fortune, or line of brilliancy (5), mental brilliancy; taste, aptitude and success in art, literature, or pursuit of wealth; line of Mercury, line of health, line of the liver, hepatic line, or the hepatica (6), condition of the liver and digestive apparatus, or maladies due to their derangement. Minor lines, often absent, are: girdle of Venus (7), indicating nervousness, liability to hysteria, intensity in predominating traits; line of Mars (8), strengthening the life line; ring of Solomon or Jupiter (9), emphasizing the characteristics of the mount and implying ability in occult science; racettes, or bracelets (10), generally three, strengthening the life line; line of intuition, line of the moon, or line of Luna (11), indicating, with other signs, a strong intuitive faculty; via lascivia (12), usually a sister line to the line of Mercury, indicating intensity of sentiments, good or bad, and, sometimes, sensuality. The lines of affection (15) denote attachment to the opposite sex. Islands (13) are narrow lanceolate figures, usually on lines, and are interpreted as evil or unfavorable signs. An apex (16) is a triangle formed by capillary lines on the pads of the fingers and the mounts; it indicates the centers and effects on the leading of these parts. The percussion (14) is formed by the outside of upper Mars and the moon. The quadrangle, or table, is the middle part of the palm, between the head and heart lines.



Palmistry, 1. Diagram showing Lines, Mounts, etc.

Pan (păn), n.; pl. PANES (pā'nēz). [L., fr. Gr. Πάν.] Gr. Relig. A god of flocks and pastures, forests and their wild life, patron of shepherds, hunters, fishermen, etc. The original seat of his worship was Arcadia, where he was supposed to wander through the forests attended by nymphs, playing upon the syrinx, or " Pan's pipes," fabled to be his invention. He was also regarded as causing sudden and groundless fear, the panic; the Athenians, believing him to have caused the panic among the Persians at Marathon, established his worship in a grotto on the Acropolis. In later times Pan became a special god of the Orphics (who interpreted his name, probably originally ὁ Πάων, the feeder, as τὸ Πᾶν, the All) as a pantheistic nature god. It is of this Orphic god that Plutarch relates how a pilot, Thamus, passing near the island of Paxos in the time of Tiberius, heard a mighty voice commanding him to proclaim " Pan is dead." Pan was represented as having the legs and sometimes the ears and horns of a goat, and this type was often multiplied into a plurality — panes, panisci — who Πανἀθήναια; πᾶς, πᾶν, all + Ἀθήνη Athena.] The most ancient and important festival of Athens, celebrated in honor of Athena (which see), the tutelary goddess of the city. There were two celebrations, the Lesser Panathenæa being held every year, and the Greater Panathenæa once in four years, in the third year of the Olympiad. The festival was held in Hecatombæon, the 28th of this month being the date of the great procession (represented on the Parthenon frieze) in which the people marched to the Acropolis bearing an embroidered pepios for the goddess. The Greater Panathenæa continued several days, and was characterized by the variety of its games (see AGONES). The prizes in the athletic contests consisted of amphoræ adorned with the figure of Athena and filled with olive oil (see AMPHORA, Illust.). The origin of the festival was ascribed to Erechtheus, or Erichthonius, and the institution of the greater penteteric celebration is believed to be due to Pisistratus. Pericles and Hipparchus added the musical contests and rhapsodical recitals of Homer to the earlier athletic games. — Pan-ath/e-næ/an (-ăn), a.
